Now I know what is meant when some people say that the Montreal Canadiens are in a league by themselves. It isn't just on the hockey rink.

I was in Montreal on October 20 with a trip organized by Acton Travel and although I am not a Montreal Canadien fan I respect how well their organization is run.

One member of our group, Ron McKnight, had a special invitation to meet Jean Beliveau game night. Ron and I figured that he would say hello, maybe give him an autographed team picture or something, and send him on his way.

I learned in a hurry that the Montreal hockey team just didn't operate like that: Ron visited the dressing room, received mementos of the trip and was ushered to his seat by a member of the Forum on request of Beliveau.

The dealing between Ron and the Canadiens was entirely first class. I must say I was impressed with the organization, not to mention their hockey club.

The Montreal Expos were a contender for the baseball crown this season but they don't bat as well as the Canadiens do. The most impressive thing about the way the Montreal Canadiens played hockey was the way they picked up passes, out of mid-air! All night long the Habs would fire rinkwide passes at belt level and very seldom was it that the receiving players couldn't knock it down with their sticks. Again, impressed.

The trip was a good time for all involved. Forty-four people started out from Acton and we picked three more up in Cornwall. Former Acton resident Bill McKenzie hitch-hiked from Perth to Cornwall to catch the bus while a Cornwall resident Bernie 'Razzy' Rasmussen and his wife, friends of Larry and Pat Taillefer, also joined the trip. Rasmussen played a lot of lacrosse at one time and apparently met up with Punch Imlach. The two, I am told, had a disagreement but Razzy straightened things out in a hurry.

It just so happened that the weekend we were in Montreal the Toronto Argos were at Olympic Stadium to play the Alouettes. The game was not the best but Olympic Stadium was more than worth the price of admission. There is no way to describe the building. You have to see it to believe it.

You could be sitting in the worst possible seat in the multi-million dollar cement masterpiece and still have as good a view as the guy sitting down in the lower tiers.

In all it was a good weekend for the majority of the crew on board. For anti-Montreal fans it was a weekend where both the Alouettes and the Canadiens turned up winners. The Als came from behind to defeat the sinking Argos 25-11 while the Habs handled the New York Rangers 5-4.

There were two special presentations at the Acton Industrial Fastball League banquet and dance on Saturday night.

One of the team captains of the past season, Darryl Whitten is moving out west and was presented with a ball autographed by all members of his championship Van's Welding team and the other team captains.

To Darryl and his family the best of luck and may he never strike out again, unless he moves back to the

The other presentation was to Family Cleaner pitcher Chuck Peavoy. Peavoy was not in attendance but his team members gave him a special trophy for his work over the season.

The award resembled a donkey's back end and was inscribed simply 'To Chuck Peavoy from Family Cleaners'.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1979 One Hundred and Fifth Year-No.17

It was a night to remember for Hab fan

by Robin Inscoc

It was a seven hour bus trip to Montreal for Ron McKnight, but it was worth every minute of it for the staunch Montreal Canadien fan.

Ron realized not one but two lifelong dreams on the trip which was arranged by Acton Travel. Forty-seven people headed on the expedition to see the Canadiens battle the New York Rangers.

Ron has been a Canadien fan since he was six years old, 24 years ago, and on October 20 his dream became a reality. Ron, accompanied by former NHL great Jean Beliveau, moved into the Montreal Canadian dressing room.

In the room there weren't just a few of the team's players, but 90 per cent of the crew of the defending Stanley Cup Champions. All were beginning to dress for that night's game.

Later on that evening Ron realized his second dream, that of meeting the voice of the Montreal-Canadiens, Danny Gallivan, a lifelong idol. Ron has been dubbed "The Voice of Acton" having looked after arena announcements for some 11 years and is still often called upon for tournaments.

Ron has been one of the area's strongest Hab supporters since he began following the team. "They were the first team I can remember watching on TV," he says. "I think their uniform caught my eye. I have been a fan ever since."

When Ron and chauffeur Roy Spear stepped into the Hab den, (Roy was on the trip helping McKnight get around in his wheelchair) he was in seventh

The whole string of events had been planned for the avid fan through Jean Beliveau. Acton Travel president Rick Bonnette put the gears in motion with a letter to Beliveau explaining Ron's involvement with hockey and his devotion as a Canadien fan. Eighteen years ago Ron met Rocket Richard.

Bonnette received confirmation from Beliveau before the trip began that Ron was to meet him at the Forum employee entrance at 6 p.m. on game

After a short talk between Beliveau and Ron they. headed off to the dressing room. Brian Engblom was the first Hab to say hello, says Ron but he wasn't the only player who spoke to him. "We went around the room and met all the players there." Ron was most impressed with Canadiens all-star defenseman Larry Robinson and Engblom. "They seemed to be the friendliest players," says Ron. His most prized memento of the trip came from Robinson who presented the Acton sportsman with one of his own official hockey sticks which was a

"They made you feel like you were one of the family," says Ron. One of the newest Canadiens, goaltender Dennis Herron, met Ron with a "Glad to meet you sir." Ron will long remember being called main conversation piece the rest of the trip.

Along with the stick from Robinson, Ron received many other tokens to remember his weekend. Canadiens gave him autographed photos of all the players, a personally autographed pennant, a Canadien calendar, a couple of books, and an autographed souvenir mini-stick.

"I hated to leave," commented Ron. "They made you feel like one of the family. I could have chatted all day."

Ron appreciates what Rick Bonnette and Jean Beliveau did for him on the trip. "They must get thousands of requests for things like that," says Ron. "They can't accommodate them all but I'm glad I was one of the fortunate ones."

Ron met another gentleman associated with the Canadien organization after leaving the dressing area to watch the game. Molson's Breweries of Canada Limited's Vice-President John Osterman met Ron by accident. As a result he was made a gift of Canadien cuff links and a promise that a Canadien ring would be mailed to him.

For Ron McKnight it was a weekend to remember. Ron says he can't think of anything that will top his weekend in Montreal and it will take quite a feat to remove the Canadien dressing room from his mind. Ron is now waiting for the next Acton Travel trip to see the Habs. He wouldn't miss it for the world.

Oh yes, Ron saw a good hockey game too. Canadiens skated to a 5-4 win over the New York Rangers in the battle between last year's Stanley Cup finalists. That put the icing on the cake to a successful weekend for Ron.

Acton's Ron McKnight enjoyed a weekend in Montreal recently where the staunch Canadien fan got a rare opportunity to visit the Montreal dressing room to meet players. While waiting in the lobby Ron dubbed "the voice of Acton," got another thrill when he met the voice of the Canadlens, Danny Gallivan, Gallivan stopped to say hello, autograph a pennant and pose for a picture before heading to his Hockey Night in Canada broadcasting post.

Malcolm to Gems?

Scott Malcolm could become the sixth graduate of Acton Minor Hockey to go elsewhere to play his hockey this season.

Malcolm is looking to the Georgetown Gemini as a possible place to play if his release can be obtained. Two other Acton grads, former linemate Dave McGilloway and Tom Ryan, are presently on that teams

Wade Vickery is another minor grad who flew the Sabres' coop. He is toiling with the Hespeler Shamrocks, a Junior "B" affiliate to the Guelph Platers, while Bruce McPhail and Todd McIntyre chose the Caledon Junior "C" Flyers as their home club. Lack of communication seems to be the biggest problem between Acton and Georgetown in getting the Malcolm deal settled. An apparent meeting between the two sides failed to materialize on Sunday

Georgetown assistant coach Chris Milne is looking forward to the possibility of having Malcolm in a Goergetown sweater, needing minor release before he can join the Gems. Malcolm toiled for Mount Hamilton Junior A's last season, returned to the Sabres and was released from there to play house league hockey according to Milne. "He's been carrying his junior release around for a year," says

It is apparent that Malcolm has no interest in playing for the Sabres. "There is another possibility," says Milne, "He can sit out the remainder of this season and join us next year as an over-age juvenile." Milne hopes that the Acton system won't let things go that far.

Acton Minor president Bruce Cargill is also hoping it won't go that far. He is hoping the whole dealing can be cleaned up within the next few days.
