Artist in school

Acton High School students, this week, benefitted from a Creative Arts in Schools program that brought professional silk screen artist John Hoffstetter to school where they can explain their specialty to the student directly.
 The Creative Arts in Schools program was originated and introduced by the Ontario Arts Council in 1973 to bring professional artists to schools where they can explain their specialty to the student directly.
 The program also grants to qualified artists to undertake projects that will help and encourage the students.
 Such a program brought Hoffstetter to Acton High this week. Hoffstetter looked after the arts class at the school where he went over the special techniques and styles of silk screening.
