REAL ESTATE
A Rockwood man who hopes to establish a leather finishing business in a residential area will be encouraged by Eramosa Township to locate elsewhere in the village.
Stan Madzarac told township council Monday he intends to set up "a small family business" in the village. According to building inspector John Salmon the location is within a residential zone.
The building inspector succeeded in persuading Madzarac on Friday to delay alterations to a barn near his home until he came to council. The barn would house the business.
Earlier in the week residents fearing the establishment of a tannery within the village, circulated a petition which objected "to the concept of having an industry in the midst of our residential zone." Forty-four residents, including two village trustees, signed the petition.
Madzarac denied any plans to establish a tannery. To some residents at the meeting he asked: "Who told you that big lie that I'm going gonna put a tannery in Rockwood?"
There was no answer. Madzarac left the meeting.
Council decided to send Madzarac a letter indicating that his proposal is unacceptable in the residential zone. However, it may be acceptable in one of the industrial zones. Council found itself on unsure ground concerning the industrial zone five because there are exemptions.
"We need a definition of tannery and obnoxious before we can give a ruling," deputy reeve Dave Masson said. Also if Madzarac intends to alter the barn, which he leases, he needs to present plans and obtain a building permit.
"There is quite an area in Rockwood zoned for this type of operation," Salmon told council. Later he said his opinion is that to allow a rezoning would be a step backwards in planning.
Madzarac indicated he does not use raw hides in the operation. He brought along samples of leather semi-product plus bottled chemicals which are also to be used.

A non-confidence motion, defeated Thursday night at Queen's Park, kept Larry Grossman, Minister of Industry and Tourism in the House and away from a scheduled date as guest speaker at the Halton Burlington Provincial Progressive Conservative annual meeting.
The elections went on as scheduled, with Jack Bellegem, Georgetown lawyer, elected president of the association.
Chosen first vice president was Archie Cooper, second vice-president Janice Johnston, secretary Irene Saunders, and newly elected president Fran Baines chairman of the Committee in Search of a Candidate, said she has been encouraged by the number of people willing to consider running for office.

Stan Madzarac told township council Monday he intends to set up "a small family business" in the village. According to building inspector John Salmon the location is within a residential zone.
The building inspector succeeded in persuading Madzarac on Friday to delay alterations to a barn near his home until he came to council. The barn would house the business.
Earlier in the week residents fearing the establishment of a tannery within the village, circulated a petition which objected "to the concept of having an industry in the midst of our residential zone." Forty-four residents, including two village trustees, signed the petition.
Madzarac denied any plans to establish a tannery. To some residents at the meeting he asked: "Who told you that big lie that I'm going gonna put a tannery in Rockwood?"
There was no answer. Madzarac left the meeting.
Council decided to send Madzarac a letter indicating that his proposal is unacceptable in the residential zone. However, it may be acceptable in one of the industrial zones. Council found itself on unsure ground concerning the industrial zone five because there are exemptions.
"We need a definition of tannery and obnoxious before we can give a ruling," deputy reeve Dave Masson said. Also if Madzarac intends to alter the barn, which he leases, he needs to present plans and obtain a building permit.
"There is quite an area in Rockwood zoned for this type of operation," Salmon told council. Later he said his opinion is that to allow a rezoning would be a step backwards in planning.
Madzarac indicated he does not use raw hides in the operation. He brought along samples of leather semi-product plus bottled chemicals which are also to be used.

REAL ESTATE
A Rockwood man who hopes to establish a leather finishing business in a residential area will be encouraged by Eramosa Township to locate elsewhere in the village.
