

Jay Sankey hasn't got a suntan this summer. This 17-year-old Acton area resident hasn't been swimming or playing ball. He's been spending five or six hours a day sitting at his desk surrounded by mirrors and diet Pepsi practising magic.

A few weeks ago the Free Press carried a short feature on Jay. Readers found it so interesting I decided a more in-depth look at this Interesting young man was needed.

Known as Conrad professionally, Jay is a dyed-in-the-wool sleight of hand illusionist who delights in deceiving the eyes. He's a member of the International Brotherhood of Magicians (IBM?) of which there are 100,000 members around the world-a very strict organization, Jay says.

He has a library of 60 magic books and puts his knowledge into practice entertaining children and adults at various social functions. Back to the kit

Jay got started in the business at the ripe old age of 12 after he went back for a second look at his toy magic set.

"Most boys get a magic kit when they're around 9 or 10 but they're boring and too much like work. I chucked mine out like everyone else

But something about Jay's set pulled him back to it. He went to a magic shop, bought a book or two and a deck of cards and started manipulating his hands. "The hand is not quicker than the eye," he comments.

"But the hand can fool the eye. The best magic is done slowly. If I were to do it really quickly, people would feel they had been tricked. The hand can deceive the eye and mislead peoples' senses."

Jay prefers sleight of hand illusions with simple props such as cards or coins. He feelsthe large illusions are better for television.

"Most (tricks) are childishly simple, people give you more credit than you should have. The whole part if knocking down peoples' ideas."

Magic books are a great help, Jay feels, pro-viding they are viell written. Although expensive they are second best to actual teaching, Jay says, remarking that the few magic lessons he took cost him $15 an hour.

He gets quite incensed over books in ordinary bookstores aimed at youngsters telling how certain popular magic tricks are performed. "That's a crime", he exclaims. Closeup magic best

There are three reasons Jay prefers closeup magic to any other kind of activity.

"There's no substitute for good steight of hand, people are more impressed with closeup work and no store can sell your trick."

"Closeup work" Jay continues "separates the laymen from the magicians and uses manipulatory skills."

Magic is a very creative art, Jay feels, as each magician usually gives a trick his own twist. The magic must fit a magician's personality. The oldest illusion on record is the old cups and balls trick which pre-dates the Bible and probably goes back 4,000 years.

Jay has performed for many diverse groups including doing street magic-one of the most difficult types of magic. He was asked to fly to Ottawa for the Natioanl Capital Commission to do a children's show. He plans to get into entertaining in restaurants and conventions doing his closeup work for individuals and "getting a chance to meet people".

Magic complements his other ambition to be a writer when he's finished with college. Currently, Jay is a student going into grade 12 in Acton High School. He hopes to go to Ryerson for a B.A. in journalism.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Sankey, of R.R. 4, Acton, Jay has parental support in his endeavors. He says he comes from an artistic family. "We all do different things."

His mother is a landscape architect, his father has his own architectural business, 20-year-old brother Chris, a U. of T. student has his own student painting business and sister Gretchen, 16, is into the arts and sculpting.

The 75 acre family property supports sheep, chickens and various dogs and cats.

Jay is not your usual run-of-the-mill teenager. He possesses a gift of the gab that would shame my Irish grandmother. He's very easy to listen to and gives the appearance of being much older Considerable travelling has matured this young man. He spent four months in Europe last fall and has been an exchange student in Quebec. Travelling doesn't seem to affect his schoolwork. Jay says he doesn't have any trouble keeping up and enjoys school.

A budding magician Jay may be and he probably has a way to go before he's another Doug Henning but he's got the charm and persuasiveness down pat. When you listen to Jay run through his patter you want to believe in magic.

Regional Plan — it's official

Housing Regional Council last Ontario Minister Claude Bennett has signed the Haiton Official Plan which now gives the region a legal definition of how land can and cannot be used.

The signing of the plan was to have taken place July 16 with the Minister present at Halton Regional Headquarters. but it all fell through when problems related to population density in Oakville caused development consortium to object.

Councillors had been asked to approve the plan with certain deletions but they would not. They asked Mr. Bennett to sign the plan as originally agreed to by all parties. Mr. Bennett would not sign the document and was forced to leave.

In the meantime, Mr. Bennett said he held a meeting with the primary objector, Westoak Trails Consortlum, and as a result, "I was able to convince the objector that the modification already agreed to by the region dealt fairly with their concerns."

Planning Committee Chairman Roy Booth told

Duff pit licensed

After seven years of red tape J.C. (Mac) Duff has an official licence to operate his pit on 195 acres beside his existing licensed pit in Limehouse.

Provincial government policy not to issue any more pit licences until the Niagara Escarpment plan was accepted was the cause of the delay. In the meantime Duff ran out of material on the existing pit, but managed to use wayside pit permits to keep operating. "But it was not satisfactory," commented Duff.

He explained after agitation much Ministry of Natural Resources agreed to issue the licences to running out of extractive material. He explained the NEC development permit was obtained last October, but the licence was only issued last week.

The extension of the pit will yield 400,000 tons annually, and will be taken from approximately 50 of the 195

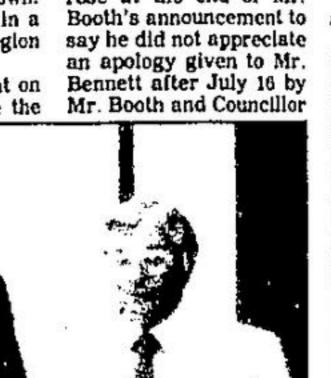

Duff pointed out 10 of the 50 acres is already depleted through the use under wayside pit permits, and are already being rehabilitated.

Another Actario

The second Actarlo early bird draw will be held this weekend with the prizes awarded next Wednesday night.

Two gourmet dinners for two will be the early bird draw prizes.

The lucky winners selected from among those who have purchased Actario tickets by the weekend will be chauffered to Prospect Park where they will be greeted and served by a French waiter, a gourmet meal prepared by the superb cooks on the town hall restoration and Actario committees.

The four succulent meals will be enjoyed under a canopy by the romantic and scenic banks of the Falry Lake. A strolling musician will serenade the diners. There will also be a wine steward on hand. Actario promotors invite those not lucky enough to win these early bird draw prizes to drop by the park anyway with a picnic supper next Wednesday at 7 p.m.
