Site F political?

By Jina Robinson

Ontario Environment Minister Dr. Harry Parrott will sit down sometime in the new year and heartily affix his signature to a document which will chart the course of landfill operations in Halton Region for the next 10 to 20 years.

The document he signs may approve a sanitary landfill site in Milton; a sanitary landfill site in Burlington; an incineration of garbage program; perhaps even a plant which will convert all waste into useable energy and reusable products.

But whatever he does it will be the classic "no-win situation" and will embody as many political considerations as environmental ones.

If the Minister should decide a proposed landfill site in Burlington on lands owned by National Sewer Pipe is most environmentally sound, he will alienate most of Halton Regional Council and throw more than $1 million worth of studies and documentation out the window, not to mention six years of studies, reports, debates, and hearings.

If he selects a proposed landfill site at the corner of Tremaine and Britannia Rds., in Milton, he will make Regional Council happy but it will not only convince the Town of Milton to continue its fight to secede from regional government which Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Tom Wells is to consider this week; but he can rest assured that he has re-elected Ontario Liberal MPP Julian Reed at a time when another provincial election is looming and Premier Davis has selected Halton-Burlington as one of the key ridings he wants to return to the Progressive-Conservative fold.

Only 246 acres of land (95 hectares) is going to be the crux on which the political, social, economic, and voting trends are going to be set in Halton Region.

The plot of land at Tremaine and Britannia Rds., known as Site F was not haphazardly chosen to accept the next two to four million tons of Halton Region's garbage.

It was as much a decision based on months of engineering and environmental studies, as it turned out to be political two years later at an Ontario Municipal Board hearing.

After months of work Halton Region's site selection committee came forward in 1977 with Site F as the most logical. The main reason given was the site is equidistant to Burlington, Oakville, Milton and Halton Hills. But Milton Mayor Don Gordon still maintains the selection was "based on Burlington having nine votes, Oakville having eight, Halton Hills having four, and Milton having only three."

"We had the least votes so we got stuck."

On June 15, 1977, Halton Region passed Resolution 162-77 which stated the Region would proceed to have Site F approved as a sanitary landfill site. The Resolution was put forward by Mayor Gordon and stated application would be through the Environmental Assessment Act (EAA).

But within weeks, then Regional Chairman Ric Morrow noted a request from environmental lawyer David Estrin who was just starting to represent a group of residents near Site F called the Tremaine-Britannia Citizens Group.

Mr. Estrin had written to Mr. Morrow wanting to know why the Region wasn't moving fast on an EAA application. Noting "this unusual interest aroused my curiosity" he ordered then solicitor R. M. Martin to look into what was going on and complete a report.

Why, Mr. Morrow wondered, would a lawyer acting for residents opposed to the landfill site be so anxious to have it go forward for application?

"Needless to say, the contents of the report indicates my concerns were more than justified," Mr. Morrow said in an Aug. 30, 1977 letter to the four mayors of Halton Region.

Mr. Morrow discovered there are two environmental regulations. One was the EAA his council had chosen and the other is the Environmental Protection Act (EPA) the one Mr. Morrow said the Council should have selected.

"As you will note, no municipality has ever made application for landfill under this Act (EAA) and the possibility of delay and associated additional costs to the area municipalities is considerable.

"I don't believe members of Council even like to consider what costs might be incurred by the citizens when we chose the Oakville and Burlington sites, if Site F is not ready.

"You know the facts and serious situations with which this Council is faced.

"The decision to select Site F has been made and should not be confused with the most practical implementation of that decision," he said in his letter.

Although Mr. Morrow is now gone from the political scene, one wonders if he could have ever imagined when he wrote the letter Aug. 30, 1977 that implementation

Oct. 15, 1980 would still hinge on the question of the EPA and the EAA? And could he have ever imagined that today the cost for studies at Site F alone is now beyond the $500,000 mark with $200,000 spent on engineering studies alone?

But perhaps most significant of all were three clauses in the report Mr. Martin prepared Aug. 19, 1977 on the EPA-EAA question.

He stated: 1. The right to have the Minister deem the appropriate zoning.

2. The right to have the Minister make an emergency order with respect to the landfill application if the situation becomes critical.

And most significantly: 3. The Minister's right to exercise political discretion to make the decision with respect to the landfill site, instead of having that decision made by an appointed body.

After that things started to happen fast. On Sept. 7, 1977, Resolution 162-77 was rescinded noting "Council hereby deems it appropriate to proceed with the Landfill Site F under the provisions of the Environmental Protection Act.

Just 12 days later the Town of Milton petitioned the Lieutenant Governor to overturn Regional Council's Sept. 7 decision and order the Council to remain with the EAA decision of June 15, 1977.

The squabble was bound to escalate. Into the fight stepped Ontario Liberal party leader Dr. Stuart Smith who demanded then Environment Minister George Kerr, proceed with Site F under the EAA as Council had voted.

On Nov. 2, 1977, Mr. Kerr wrote to Dr. Smith stating in part that he would go along with rescinding as Council requested and let Halton Region proceed under the EPA.

Mr. Kerr said in part, "now that Halton Regional Council has withdrawn its request to place its waste disposal facility under the Environmental Assessment Act, I believe it would not be in the public interest for the Government to single out this particular project for treatment under procedure different than those which currently pertain to other municipalities.

"I trust you will understand that Halton Regional Council's Sept. 7 resolution has really left me with no other choice but to proceed with the legal requirements already in force."

The final act in the first part of the EPA-EAA fight came Nov. 23, 1977 when Ontario Environmental Approvals Branch Director D. P. Caplice stated Mr. Kerr had decided against the Site F application going under the EAA "and that he will not be recommending to Cabinet that any action be taken with respect to bringing Halton's proposed facility under the Act."

But it was not the end. This very day the current Environmental Minister is considering a court injunction given Sept. 30, 1980 at which time Mr. Justice James Southey has brought the whole EPA-EAA question back to the Minister's desk some two years after it was supposed to have been settled.

Broadly speaking the EPA deals with the specific spot on the map which is to be studied environmentally while the EAA takes into the picture the entire Region and considers the environmental impact not just on flora and fauna, but on people economically and sociologically.

But all this talk about the EAA and the EPA means nothing to Miss Bessie Smith.

She is a 95-year-old spinster who lives in a home which will, if Site F is approved, be surrounded on three sides by the garbage dump.

Miss Smith has lived in the home all her life and has become the rallying point of the Tremaine-Britannia Citizens Group. And rally they have.

The TBCC celebrates Miss Smith's birthday each year; they hold regular "cump dances" parties
