In just over two weeks Brian Rennick, the school-bus driving pastor of the Acton Pentecostal Assembly will be winging his way to Zambia to spread the word of God. Accompanying him will be his wife Colleen and daughters, Carrie 3 and Tiffany, 1.

"I'm apprehensive but looking forward to it" says Colleen.

The Rennicks will spend at least four years in Africa. They have to return for a year after the first mission but plan to head back for more mission work if all goes well.

So far Zambia is a place with little Pentecostal church involvement, Brian explains. He has been assigned the duties of "church planning" around Chipata in the eastern province of Zambia. Although this sounds impressive, Brian will actually be starting from scratch as there are no churches in his territory at all-he'll be laying foundations as well as planning.

Moving plans have been rushed and the Rennicks haven't had much time for research into their new home. They have both attended mission school and will have a "crash course" orientation when they arrive at the missions base in Lusaka, Zambia. However, most of their orientation will be done in the field getting to know the people among whom they'll work.

Brian explains his territory is primarily agricultural and consists of tribal Africans of varying religious beliefs ranging from Moslem to ancient ancestor worship. The Rennicks don't even know what kind of dwelling they'll inhabit although they are assured they will have western culture amenities such as electricity and indoor plumb-

Brian says his main adjustment will be in adapting his standards of achievement to fit in with those of a more relaxed society. He's there as a catalyst and says he has to be flexible and ready to fit in where he's needed.

He's confident his preaching and teaching will be accepted. In two years the Pentecostal Church has "planted" 370 churches in Kenya, a country that is now considered over 50 per cent Christian.

"The church (Pentecostal) in Kenya and Malawi is expanding very well" Brian comments adding "we're seeing tangible results".

Two of the areas that have bothered Missionaries previously in African cultures are polygamy and tribalism such as ancestor worship.
These beliefs go against Christian doctrines,
Brian explains, and must be handled carefully.

"You can't expect to pull out one part of their culture and put another in, you have to try to determine what . . .is totally against Christianity and has to go".

He adds that the practice of ancestor worship has to be modified and blended with Christian life as Brian spreads the gospel. "My first concern is the children and my family" she states but adds she has permission to teach bible study in the schools. She's interested in craft work und sees this as an area to open doors between her and the other women. In the remainder of her free time (?) Colleen will be acting as Brian's secretary, taking care of the vast amount of correspondence between the Mission and Canada.

Having been in the ministry for five years after graduating from Eastern Pentecostal College in Peterborough, Brian feels prepared to handle his mission obligations. He's been in Acton for three-and-a-half years in charge of the 50 member church and 100 member Sunday School. Prior to service here, he spent 18 months in Hamilton as an assistant pastor in charge of youth and music.

Although happy in Acton, Brian experienced a restlessness some months ago and found himself exploring the field of missions eventually securing his post in Africa. He and Colleen seem somewhat stunned with the speed their plans have moved. For instance it only took 13 days for their work permits to reach Africa and be approved.

Collecn says she will enjoy slowing down to an African pace of life and relishes the closeness she anticipates the family will develop.

Brian agrees and states, "Africa is a community and family orientated society not as individualistic as we are".

Although the Rennicks are not quite sure what their life will be like for the next four years. they'll soon find out. They depart Canadian earth on Sunday June 7 with the good wishes of their Acton friends following them.
