

AN OSTRANDERS SPECIAL EVENT

What is a 35-year-old Englishman doing spending most of his day in the fine china departments of major stores all across North America? On the surface it may seem an unlikely place to find an energetic, young man — at least until you learn his name.

Michael Doulton is the fifth generation descendant of John Doulton who in 1815 founded the internationally renowned Royal Doulton Company, now the world's largest manufacturer of consumer ceramics.

Michael Doulton was educated in both England and France, and received his degree in French language and art from the Sorbonne in Paris. He is an avid sportsman and enjoys deep sea fishing, sailing, skeet shooting and hunting.

Michael Doulton is based in London at the corporate headquarters. His responsibilities primarily include public relations and sales promotion; and his role as Royal Doulton's "travelling ambassador" has taken him to many parts of the world to enhance Royal Doulton products.

Royal Doulton is a collector's world especially in the line of Royal Doulton character and Toby Jugs.

Royal Doulton figures and jugs have become so prized that a newly formed world-wide collectors club has been recently formed with offices in London, England, Toronto, Canada, Sommerset, N.J., U.S.A.

One of the most sought-after figures is a recent production that of the Queen Mother which has more than doubled in value since it was sold less than a year ago. The upcoming wedding of Prince Charles and Lady Diane has really sparked a big demand for these figures and related articles now in production.

While touring in Canada and the United States, Michael Doulton participates in a series of special Royal Doulton in-store events and exhibitions. Here he speaks directly with consumers about Royal Doulton products, past and present; and forms lasting bonds with established and new Royal Doulton collectors. Quite articulate, he has been interviewed on television and radio many times on behalf of stores around the country and has formed many lasting relationships not only with the retail stores, but with the consumers and collectors of Royal Doulton.
