MP favors energy rebate

Canada's federal government should be doing something to help low and middle income citizens being hurt by ever-increasing energy prices, according to Halton MP Otto Jelinek. Jelinek recently called on the federal government to introduce an energy tax rebate similar to the one proposed in the December 1979 budget that led to the defeat of the government of Joe Clark.

"We thought then that this was something the rest of the country wanted," Jelinek said in a telephone interview from his Ottawa office. That budget, which also increased the price of gasoline by 18 cents a gallon became the prime issue in the election campaign that restored Pierre Trudeau to the government side of the House of Commons after a nine month absence. According to figures provided by Jelinek, consumers pay up to 60 cents a gallon in tax whenever they purchase gasoline. He said a rebate of up to 15 per cent of that tax would assist many being hurt by the ever rising prices. "This is something that Canadians are really concerned about," he said. "Ask any low or middle income family or farmer who has to depend on energy and you'll get a quick answer about how much it is hurting."

Jelinek added that despite his persistent demands for change, he doesn't expect any action by the government, at least until a pricing agreement is reached with Alberta.

Brassard joins Halton police

After more than four years as fire prevention officer for the Town of Halton Hills, Larry Brassard will be leaving the fire hall and heading to the police station.

A Georgetown native, Brassard will remain in town after leaving his post August 14 and will begin police training with the Halton Regional Force in September.

Brassard said he had thought of becoming a police officer five years ago before he accepted the position with the fire department. "It's a life-long ambition, something I've always wanted to do and I'm looking forward to it," Brassard said.

Although he is changing his place of employment, Brassard will become no stranger to the fire hall. He will remain as a member of the volunteer Georgetown brigade as are police officers Bill Cunningham and Don Cousens.

One of three paid positions in the Halton Hills fire department, Brassard as fire prevention officer was responsible for fire inspections, building plan reviews, some complaint investigations and public education.

"I'm looking forward to the challenge of a new job. The last four and half years with Halton Hills have been good," Brassard said.
