Tips from the Handyman's Wife
Blanching (pre-cooking)

All vegetables must be blanched before freezing since they contain chemical substances called enzymes, which if not controlled by blanching will cause undesirable changes in the flavour, color and texture of the vegetables when frozen. Although some loss in food value occurs in blanching, the frozen vegetable, when cooked, should compare favorably with the cooked fresh vegetable.

For blanching in a blancher or large kettle with cover. Use 4 quarts (20 cups) of water to about 1 pound of vegetables; 8 qts. for leafy vegetables.

Place the vegetable in the blancher stainer or in a wire basket or in a cheesecloth bag. Lower into the vigorously boiling water. Place cover on blancher or kettle and immediately start counting the blanching time. Keep heat on high so that water will quickly return to the boil. Follow these blanching times because under blanching or over-blanching by a minute or two will make quite a difference in the quality of the vegetable: - 2 minutes for peas, spinach, 3 minutes for medium asparagus, cut green or wax beans, medium broccoli, small brussels sprouts, cauliflower, 4 min. for whole-kernel corn; large asparagus, whole beans, large broccoli, medium brussels sprouts.
