

Acton Hallowe'en quiet

An impressive police presence in Acton both on Friday and Hallowe'en nights produced one of the quietest nights of the horrors in many years.

Inspector Matt MacPherson, Halton Regional Police, said the force is "very pleased" with how quiet the town was on Friday and Saturday nights.

Besides five uniformed officers and one auxiliary police officer on duty all night in town, Inspector MacPherson and a staff-sergeant also visited town on Hallowe'en for two hours.

Police had two officers on foot patrol downtown while two unmarked cars and three marked cruisers patrolled the streets.

There were very few incidents and what was reported was very minor, MacPherson said.

Two people were held for breach of the peace; they were trying to encourage young people walking downtown to start something and were also shouting and swearing. A large crowd never formed.

A few eggs were thrown at some shops downtown, nothing like last year, and there were some eggs thrown on streets and at homes in residential areas.

Police did break-up one egg throwing fight between two groups of youths behind Acton High School.

MacPherson said he thought the officers working in Acton both nights did an "exceptional job." He noted the extra officers were on the scene from 6 p.m. on both nights so nothing really got a chance to get going.

Blame snow for crash

The first snow fall of the season is blamed for an accident on the Seventh Line recently.

Guelph OPP say Walter Barnhart 65 of Hillsburgh was northbound on the Seventh near Ballinacree and a car driven by Dennis Bacon, 43, RR 1, Orton was southbound when the cars collided.

Police estimate damage at $1,500 to the Barnhart vehicle and $1,000 to the Bacon car.

Both drivers, and a passenger, Orpha Barnhart were taken to Georgetown hospital with minor injuries.
