

Committee changes

Committee chairman in Halton's education structure will now be elected by their peers, trustees decided last week.

Acting on a recommendation from Milton trustee Ivan Armstrong, trustees approved a change to the board's bylaw which allowed the annual striking committee to name the chairman of the board's advisory committees.

In his motion, Mr. Armstrong said allowing the committee members to choose their own chairman would make the committees function better because the members would be working with people they support.

Burlington trustee Bill Priestner said he supported the "democratic intent" of the motion, but wondered how chairmen could be found for especially difficult committees, such as salary negotiations.
