Meeting fails to wring concessions from trustees

committee of the Halton Board of Education and representatives of councils and Chambers of Commerce across Halton region may have opened new lines of communications and relieved some verbal frustrations but there were no promises from trustees to reduce the controversial $132 million budget.

Finance chairman Bill Priestner, the crusty separate school representative from Burlington, suggested the board may be able to effect some economies when the new school year starts in September that would benefit taxpayers next year but that was the only concession mayors, councillors and C of C reps across Halton could wring out of the board.

The meeting was held to discuss the 1982 budget following written requests from Halton Hills, Oakville and Milton town councils to the board asking a review. The board also received earlier requests from the Oakville and Burlington Chambers of Commerce to review the budget. Trustees decided to invite council and Chamber representatives to a private meeting with the finance committee but the meeting was later opened to press and public.

Councillors Harry Levy and Ross Knechtel represented Halton Hills council while the Chamber of Commerce was represented by Georgetown president Doug Penrice. Georgetown trustee Betty Fisher also attended but only as an observer. She saw little that was new in the objections and discussion except an assessment proposal from Milton mayor Gord Krantz to alleviate the education levy in his town.

Councillor Harry Levy said he considered the meeting a start to open up the lines of communica-

Such a program would serve no useful purpose, he said, and if it was Oakville trustee Florence Meares in an impassioned speech suggested muncipal councils and Chamber reps, devoted to selling their communities which includes the educational facilities, would not want to see programs cut so Halton fell behind the times. Oakville mayor Harry Barrett, on the other hand, suggested the board must do what municipal councils are doing-lowering expections.

The four days in Ottawa for Marlene made the government seem less untouchable, she says, "You can actually do your part."

Marlene was impressed with the organization of the entire stay, including transportation to and from various places.

Trucks driven over graves

Cars and trucks driven in Fairview Cemetery are going right over graves.

Harriet Helwig attended Friday's councillors' drop-in to say she was "sick" to see graves driven over and grave markers damaged.

Councillor Terry Grubbe said she has observed tire track marks between gravestones and added part of the problem may be sometimes town trucks are too wide to navigate the narrow cemetery

Big trucks shouldn't be taken into the cemetery. Councillor Russ Miller declared.

Mrs. Helwig said she knows she isn't the only resident concerned about the use of vehicles in the cemetery. She said she was "terribly upset" when she couldn't even find one grave cornerstone.

She went with Grubbe and Councillor Ross Knechtel to inspect the cemetery. Knechtel also talked with engineer Robert Austin over the phone twice and reported in some areas graves have encroached on the road. In some spots, he noted, shrubs have been used to prevent vehicles from cutting corners. The engineer will be looking at ways to solve the problem.

New retail outlet opens at Toronto Wood Treating firm

While the slumping economy is blamed for closing down stores and businesses in downtown Acton, it is responsible for at least one new opening in the industrial park.

Toronto Wood Treating recently opened a retail store at their Commerce Court property to help spur business.

The company, owned and operated by David Phipps, moved to Acton six years ago from Thunder Bay. Increasing transportation costs forced the move south, closer to their market.

Until last month, business was restricted to pressure treating wood for various customers to make it last longer. Some wood they purchase themselves, treat it, and resell it. Most is owned and sold by others. They are also the largest manufacturers of guardrails in Ontario.

They sold to a few retail customers Phipps admits, but did not encourage this type of business. However, now with the lumber business at such a slow pace, they hoped the retail end would help the company make it through the slowdown in other

So far, response to their new store has been good, Phipps said. People enjoy the cash and carry factory outlet for lumber for fences, decks and patios. They have no plans for moving this outlet to another location closer to town. Phipps says he feels people

Harold Postma is new Credit Union manager

A lot of people have misconceptions about Credit Unions, according to Acton's newest manager, Harold Postma.

Postma came to Acton three weeks ago to replace John Kruchuk as manager of the Acton branch of the Halton Community Credit Union Ltd. Kruchuk was promoted to the Milton main branch where he is in charge of loans.

Many people, think his banking institution is totally payroll deductions and loans, Postma said. While they do offer both, they also offer chequing and have teller service, as in other banks he pointed Postma comes to Acton from the Georgetown branch. Before that he worked for the Continental Bank in Kitchener, which was born from IAC Limited, a finance company.

Born and raised in Holland, Postma came to Canada in 1966 to visit relatives. He never intended to stay, but he was so impressed with the country and the wide open spaces that he decided to quit his bookkeeping job and immigrate to Canada.

Postma enjoys working at the Credit Union. He feels there is a lot more personal contact with the members, and because the staff have held their positions for so long, they are well known in the community and know all the members' names.

A variety of membership services, Postma feels, makes his operation competitive with downtown

Shares, share certificates, insured savings, term deposits and short term deposits, and chequing are just a few of the services Postma feels the general public is not aware they offer.

Postma is looking forward to meeting all the members of the Halton Community Credit Union Limited in Acton.
