

Playground finale Aug. 19

This year the Halton Hills recreation department's summer activities (playground) finale will take place on Thursday August 19. Plans are now underway to organize some exciting activities for the evening for all children participating in summer activities 1982.

These summer programs are Tot Lot, Gymnastics Camp, Sport and Fitness, Day Camp, Survival Camp, Summer Activity Centre, Les Activités Francais D'ete.

The dramatic arts program will be doing something very special during the first week of August. Because there are only four days that week, they will be focusing all their energies into a special show for the community at the Cultural Centre. Anyone between the ages of 7-13 who wants to get involved should register soon. The cost for the shortened week is only $20.

Last Thursday, they taped another television program at Halton Cable for Outer Space Week. The on-the-spot correspondents interview natives on other planets, and the feature program, "Believe it or Else" includes some absolutely impossible acts such as Magnetic Elaine, Flying Emily, Time Travelling Kevin, and Martians that can walk through one another. For an out of this world show, tune in channel 4 tonight (July 28) at 6.15 p.m. and again next Wednesday at 6.15.

The recreation department reported that Day Camp at Prospect Park has been going great! The children are having a fantastic summer enjoying the various activities offered.

There is only one more session remaining for canoeing, archery, swimming, campcraft, games, singing, crafts and a whole lot of fun. As well as these exciting activities Day Camp ends with a sleepover at Blue Springs.

Children can sign up at 25 James St., Georgetown, or 40 Mill St., Acton. If you need more information about Day Camp call 877-5185, ext. 83.

Despite the recent heat wave, students are persevering with their work on the Crawford Lake Archaeological Excavation project. The students are uncovering a large area where an Indian village once stood.

Students unearth Indian history

Working under a hot sun, the students carefully scraped soil away with small hand trowels. The task is tedious, but there are few complaints because they are involved in uncovering Indian history.

Working on a hilltop above Crawford Lake just off Steeles Ave. near Campbellville, they are part of a unique dig that will locate a prehistoric Indian village.

A preliminary dig in 1973 resulted in the discovery of six Iroquois long-houses which made up the village.

The purpose of this dig is to locate the palisade which probably enclosed the village, then rebuild it before reconstruction of the long-houses begins. The location of the six longhouses is already known.

An Ontario Heritage Foundation grant has provided $20,000 to pay the cost of the complete excavation of the village site over the next two months.

Students are working under the direction of Dr. William Finlayson, executive director of the Museum of Indian Archaeology in London, Ont.

The careful scraping reveals dark circles of earth indicating where former posts for walls once stood, explained Dr. Finlayson.

He said the village site is typical of its kind—located high on a hill to provide both a vantage point and a suitable defence location.

Unfortunately, plowing on the land for the past 100 years has resulted in the destruction of many Indian artifacts, stated Dr. Finlayson.

The Crawford Lake Indian Village and Conservation Centre project has been organized by the Halton Region Conservation Foundation—a Halton-wide group of volunteers now conducting a campaign to raise $700,000 to rebuild the village and create a new nature centre at Crawford Lake.

Over $70,000 has already been raised, according to Gary Hutton, manager of the community relations division for the Foundation.

Operation HAVE

Aiding victims of crime

By Steve Arnold

Victims of crime deserve better service than they are getting from the justice system today, but budgets and manpower problems often make that a difficult goal.

With the aid of seven summer students, employed through federal make-work projects, Halton Regional Police are working to solve part of that problem.

Operation HAVE (Halton Aid to Victims through Education), is an effort by the force to keep the victims of minor crimes updated on the progress police are making in their efforts to solve the occurrence, to cut the number of false alarms being turned in by automatic systems and to update contact files for business.

Carolyn Hall, manager of the project, said the aid to victim's portion of her project is an effort to let victims know that they haven't simply been lost in the police department's files.

She explained that many minor crimes, such as residential break-ins and bicycle and car thefts, can be classed as "dead end occurrences" because there are no firm leads for police to follow.

In these instances, the victims should be told there is little chance of someone being caught, "but the officers get backlogged and they really don't have time for that," she said.

Now, through her student workers, the victims of such offences can be contacted and asked if they have any further information about the incident and told what progress the police have made.

"People who've been the victim of a crime are often worried because they don't know what is happening," but something like this has helped in a lot of cases," Miss Hall said.

"We've been getting a lot of positive response from the community because of this," she said.

Miss Hall's six student workers are divided in three teams of two each. While one team works another contacts businesses updating the files on contacts for afterhours incidents.

She explained when police are called to a business late at night they want to contact the right person for information or access to the building.

"At three in the morning you don't want to be calling the wrong person," she said.

The third aspect of the summer program, funded by the federal Ministry of the Solicitor-General, is a program to cut down the number of false alarms to which police are called.

Constable Scott Pringle, crime prevention officer for North Halton, said 98 per cent of the alarms turned in by automatic systems are false—a danger for police.

"They know that most of the calls are false alarms so they tend to get a little lazy going in to these situations," he said.

Peel Region, in a similar effort to deal with such problems, cuts off police service to businesses that are habitual offenders in that way.

Halton businessmen however, have been quick to respond to student's invitation to improve, Miss Hall said.
