Rural clusters

Ground water studies premature says Sheldon

Groundwater studies in the rural cluster areas of Halton are not a priority, and should not be done at this time, Councillor Pam Sheldon told Halton Hills council, this week.

Planning Director Ian Keith pointed out the Region "had found some money for Hydrogeological studies." He said regional planners wanted to determine the adequacy of water supply in any rural cluster which might be designated a hamlet within the next few years.

Sheldon maintained studies of something which might happen in the future, when no residents in the rural clusters had asked for it, seemed to her just another method of spending money.

Councillor Russ Miller asked if there would be public meetings before any of the four larger rural clusters, Hornby, Limehouse, Terra Cotta, and Ballinafad would be considered as hamlets.

Meanderings by Mabel Barkman

Open Sesame!

When it comes to opening bags, bottles, cans, etc., I often wish I were as clever as Ali Baba. I am positive that the people who close packages are determined they won't open easily. The bag of feed that says "pull here" inevitably snags and I have to use a knife or scissors to open it. The key provided for fish cans slips on easily and then immediately breaks off. I am sure that children can open a bottle of aspirin more easily than I.

Mr. Bennett joined Beardmore and Company in 1928 and eventually became President. He was Vice-President of Canada Packers for 18 years. For 41 years he was on the Board of Directors of Dominion Stores Limited.

Q: Ever see a fat jogger?
