Soon pay to park at GO stations

By Robert Ashe

There is no rate set, and an exact date has yet to be established, but rest assured you'll be soon paying for parking at GO Transit stations.

Although the amount is not likely to be debated at the GO board meeting for at least another month, according to GO information officer Tom Henry, motorists will pay a "relating nominal" fee. Mr. Henry said the flat daily sum will be similar to the 75 cents charged at the Toronto Transit Commission lots. The target date for the charges is the spring of 1983.

"This is a total non-story," said Mr. Henry, referring to the decision to charge for parking made in May, 1981. "I can't believe the ink this is getting."

Mr. Henry said that free parking was one of the "sales tools" used to overcome the bias attitude towards public transportation in 1967, GO's inaugural year. At that time, land used for parking was purchased at very low cost. This not the case any longer, says Mr. Henry. He said the cost to develop and maintain one parking space was 60 cents to $1 a day.

Public awareness of the parking levy comes on the heels of the increase in commuter fees a few weeks ago. Charges went up and average of 16 per cent at that time.

Public response to the looming parking costs has been "relatively minor," Mr. Henry said noting it's only when people object are they prone to voice their views.

"If you are happy, you normally sit there," he said.

Exactly how the parking fees are to be collected is another point to be ironed out. Mr. Henry said placing a man in a booth may not be the most cost effective method.

"It (the booth system) has its drawbacks in access to the parking lot," he said. "Commuters tend to leave things to the last minute..."
