Board grants trial run for a televised meeting

Oakville Cablenet will be televising a Halton Board of Education meeting as a trial run for possible full time coverage of the meetings.

Thursday evening the board voted to have the test run at the expense of the cable television company. The program will then be picked up by Halton Cable Systems Limited for showing in north Halton homes also.

If the test project is successful, the trustees will be considering whether or not to pay a minimum of $2,000 for the installation of an all-weather audio and video cable porthole and an independent electrical circuit for the television lighting to provide permanent coverage. The cable firm provides the lights and wiring. Should the board decide to provide their own lighting and permanent fixtures, the bill could run as high as $5,600 in addition to the original $2,000.

Milton trustee Ivan Armstrong pointed out the costs would not stop at the original figure. He noted the board would be looking at janitorial and technical staff help which is not mentioned in Cablenet's proposals.

Burlington's Bill Priestner supported the televised meetings, saying it was a way of letting the public see exactly what goes on at the meetings, especially at budget time. "The public made it perfectly clear to us this past spring that we are spending too much money." He reasoned that "if for a nominal fee we can make available to the public our meetings, we owe it to them."

Georgetown representatives Betty Fisher said she was in favor of televising meetings only if it was at no cost to the taxpayers. She stated the Oakville and Burlington council meetings are televised and they did not have to pay anything for the installation of equipment.

She told the board they have to look at the fact not everyone has cable television in their homes. She will not support the expenditure of any money, but did support the trial run.

Milton and Halton Hills separate school representative John Bradley was also against spending money. "We have even had to cut out coffee and biscuits," he quipped referring to the board now charging for refreshments at the bi-monthly meetings.

Milton trustee Bill Lawson joined the ranks of those not supporting the idea because of the costs recently spent on a "communication device" which is reaching all the homes (a newsletter from the board). "If we want to try to communicate by the electronic network then they would have to withdraw from the printed route—we cannot afford both," he told the other trustees.

Elaine Riehm, Burlington, opposed the idea because she thought only homes south of Highway 5 had cable television.

Georgetown's Fisher chided, "As incredible as it may sound, we in the north have television, we even have cable." She pointed out on a more serious note however, that those in the rural areas of north Halton are not serviced by cable.

Priestner contended based on this rationale then maybe busing should be phased out because not everyone takes the bus to school.

The trustees voted for the trial run, and will further discuss weekly coverage at board expense.
