working, languages and dance.

At the end of the eight years of elementary education, she added, children enter a period of rapid intellectual growth, for which they are better prepared because they have full control of their creative energies.

In Grade 2, she added, children are taught two other languages mainly orally, "Because at that age they learn by listening, not by understanding grammatical structures."

Mrs. Saul-Jacklein admitted that because the junior Waldorf grades don't put as much emphasis on the three Rs as regular schools, their students may appear to be falling behind.

"By Grade 3, however, they have fully caught up and have learned a few things besides," she said.

Like other alternative schools in Ontario, the Waldorf facilities do not receive financial support from the Provincial government. Parents must continue to provide tax support to the public or separate school board in their municipality and pay tuition fees to the Waldorf school.

"There is a little official blessing, but the schools are financially independent," she said, adding that Waldorf fees vary from area to area.
