Rabies
The photograph that accompanies this column shows a fox with more than its share of porcupine quills. The fox, which normally shies away from the armored tail-swisher, died of rabies. Rabid animals do unusual things.

Dave Johnston is a leader of the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources' Rabies Research Unit in Maple, Ontario. His enemy is a viral disease that attacks the brain and is fatal to mammals if they are not protected. Foxes and skunks are the main carriers in this province, but it also affects everything from cattle to weasels.

Now have a pleasant New Year's Eve and the best of luck in 1983.

It's scramble time.
