Meet Ralph Vaughn-Williams at Choral Society concert

When man first discovered his versatile thumb, he let out a squeal of delight. In time, the squeal developed into chant, then song and thence into music. But first there was the great universal music and it too had to evolve into speech and finally, consciousness. Quite a performance from a mere squeal.

Provocative trivia from natural history leads to composer Ralph Vaughn-Williams, the grandson of Charles Darwin. He was also related to Josiah Wedgwood but china is not so interesting a start for the musician who will be featured in Georgetown Choral Society's Spring Concert.

Ralph Vaughn-Williams, organist, violinist and choir director, died in 1958 at the age of 86. He had a prolific career composing nine symphonies and several operas. It is not this repertoire that attracts him to us today. Along with his composing, Vaughn-Williams collected the folk music of England, along with all the Tudor choral music he could find, and set the melodies and airs into orchestrated arrangements. It was a work of love which gives him his greatest following today. The music is stunning, making him the darling of most aspiring choir directors. It is also difficult to sing, leaving sopranos breathless and tenors hoarse.

"The art of music, above all other art, is the expression of the soul of the nation," wrote Vaughn-Williams. He ranks just behind Elgar among English composers but probably outstrips the master in choral works by an English furlong, give or take a few chains.

Come out to hear his music, April 13 and 15, at the John Elliott Centre. Tickets are available from choir members or Oxbow Books, 102 Main Street, Georgetown, 877-8861.
