Switch Jobs Week would cure our grumbling

I'm not much of a one for special weeks. It's not that I don't approve wholeheartedly of National Cat Week or National Sauerkraut Week, Though I'd just as soon tickly a snake's belly, I'll scratch a cat's ear if I have to, and I'll choke down a forkful of sauerkraut, though I'd enjoy a monthful of moldy moss equally well.

It's just that I don't become aware of them until they're all over. By the time I realize it's National Fireworks Week, and have written a hot editorial about it, we're right into National Fire Prevention Week, and there I am, telling everybody to run around with a match in hand, sending off rockets.

All this preamble, as any idiot child could guess with one head tied behind his back, is merely a crafty way of leading up to my nomination for a special week. I'm fed up with everybody being fed up with his job, and wishing he, or she, could do something else that looks twice as rosy.

For example, a butcher wants to be a surgeon because he believes he was cut out to cut up, there's more money in it, and anyhow, it's easier. A dentist thinks he'd make a dandy politician, but he hasn't got the pull. A street cleaner wants to join the air force, because he knows how to pilot. If you are now whimpering for mercy, I'll tell you about National Switch John Week.

Here's how it works. Once a year, for a full week, each of us has a chance to tackle that job we know we should be doing if an evil fate hadn't tossed us into our present rut. It might be a mite confusing, but look at the fun we'll have. Best time to have this special week would be right about now. when everybody is completely browned off with winter.

Say you're a hydro linesman, and you think teachers have it so much better. Nice warm classroom, when you're out in a piercing wind. Snug in bed at night, when you're called out to fumble with a broken line after the sleet storm. Hours nine to four, and two months' holidays. Well, all you do is take over a claesroom during National Switch Jobs Week. There'll be no trouble getting a classroom, because all the teachers will have switched jobs with truck drivers, because the latter make more money, according to the teachers.

And there'll be no shortage of truck driving jobs, because all the truck drivers will be working in factories, as they're sick of being away from home so much. And there'll be no lack of factory jobs, as all the ordinary hands will be moving up into the executive offices, where the work is so much easier and and the money so much better. Naturally, there'll be a lot of executive vacancies, because all the bosses are sick of the tension and responsibility and all they want to do is have a little farm of their own, where they can get back to the simple life, sleep nights without sedatives and conquer their ulcers.

Farms? There'll be lots of them. The farmers will all be taking over stores, so they can sit around on their fat butts all day like the merchants, and watch the bank balance grow. The stores will all be available, of course, because all the merchants will be away sailing on the Great Lakes where the REAL easy money is.

See how simple it is? It works for women, too. All the housewives would become models, all the models actresses, and all the actresses would be able to revert to being the simple little housewives they are at heart, with eighty-dollar aprons tied becomingly over their bullfighter's pants.

Personally, I'm going to put in for a preacher's job during the grand switch. Work one day and spend the rest of the week drinking tea and shooting the breeze with jolly old ladles who are only too glad to help you run the church. You can't beat that for an easy living.

Well, how does it strike you? Myself, I think it's the greatest idea since psychiatry was invented. One week's dose of the other fellow's job, once a year, would sweep away all the envy, malice and boredom that afflicts the human race.

I can just see them at the end of their week. The hydro linesman would be scrambling frantically up the highest pole he could find. The teacher would be ready to adopt that lippy toenager he couldn't abide. The truck driver would be hurtling down the highway with a song in his heart and his foot hard down on the gas pedal.

The factory hand would be crooning over his lathe. The executive would be tossing down his tranquilizer pills hilarlously. The farmer would kiss the first cow e saw when he got home. The merchant would hum a merry tune as he gaily punched out the accompaniment on the cash register.

Friend housewife would be so glad to get out of that girdle she had to don as a model, she'd sail in and redecorate the whole house. And yours truly would be just as overjoyed to get out of that dog-coliar, and be able to swear, look over the dames, and have a beer again.
