

Spring's like heaven, a future reward

In the mind's eye of the poet, the painter, the composer, Spring is hot stuff. It is Oh to be in England now that April's there (Browning). It is a bunch of gals in long nighties scattering petals as they dance in the gladsome glade (Boccaccio). It is lambs gambolling to the notes of the shepherd's pipes (Beethoven).

Now, that may be all very true in Europe, where those birds operated, and where Spring is indeed a bewitching seductress that makes the senses reel. But I am not, to my regret a poet, the only painting to which I can point with pride is my storm windows, I can barely make a tune discernible on the kazoo, and most important of all, I am a Canadian.

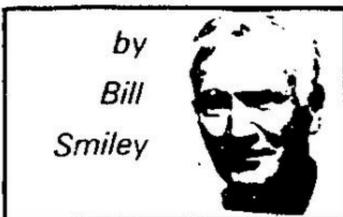

So I'm afraid I'll have to go along with Samuel Butler, who had a more prosaic view of Spring. Of course, Sam, though he was an Englishman, had visited Canada, as witness those immortal lines "Oh God! Oh Montreal!" He stated flatly that Spring is "an over-praised season... more remarkable, as a general rule, for biting east winds than genial breezes."

Spring, for the average resident of Ontario, is like heaven, something to be looked forward to with a certain hearty optimism, mingled with a slight doubt about its eventual appearance.

Only about once in ten years does Spring actually materialize in this country. Then the natives go completely haywire. Forgetting the other nine cold, dreary springs, they whip off their long underwear, go for long walks in the woods, and fall deeply in love, though not necessarily in that order. Of course, they catch severe headcolds, get blisters and lost, and marry people they normally wouldn't be seen dead in a ditch with.

It's also a time of promise. Every Spring I

by

There's no denying, though, that spring is a time of resurgence of life. There's nothing so heartwarming as the sight of the annual spring crop of babies, out on display in the pram parade on the first sunny day. Their slim young mothers, who were girls just last fall, have a new beauty and dignity as they sail along three abreast, pushing honest taxpayers into the gutter.

For our senior citizens, spring is the most wonderful gift of all. They have been dicing with death all winter, and as the sun warms their old bones, they know they have won another toss, and a welcome respite, before they have to pick up said bones and shake, rattle and roll them again.

For the kids, there are drains to make. Boats to float, puddles to wade through, and lovely mud that squishes underfoot. Threats, orders and imprecations from their harassed mothers, trying to cope with the annual flood of muddy footprints and wet shirt-tails, have no more effect than rain on a duck.

For the farmer, spring means another nine months of breaking his back for peanuts. For the sailor, it means leaving the wild scramble of family life for the comparative calm of life on the deep. For the housewife, it is a time to attack the house like the Assyrian coming down on the fold. For young lovers, it is a time to act even sillier than usual.

Whatever it means to us, and even if it doesn't arrive until the 30th of June, to be immediately transplanted by a hot summer, it's the only thing that makes it worth while to battle our way through the winter. The year spring fails to arrive at all, I want somebody to take me out quietly behind the barn and shoot me.
