Friends ensure I'm not going down the drain

It's been a long, cold winter and spring, and my beart is still sore. But the tulips are bursting and the sun is shining, and the kindness of people keep the spirit alive.

There's a tendency to sleep in, and stay up until the last late movie is over, and to exist on frozen chicken pies.

But I can't do it. The phone keeps ringing. Old friends drop in. People bring me gifts.

Naturally, the phone rings when I'm on the john or in the bath-tub. I think I'll have it removed. Not the bathtub, but the phone.

Gifts? A daffodil in January. A pet of 'mums (I can't spell the whole word) in February. A chicken pie and butter tarts in March. An Easter lily from dear Julie at Easter. Cooked goodies from Evelyn, my «cleaning lady. Three pounds of California dates from my old roommate at college. (What does one do with three pounds of dates?)

Letters still come from all over the continent. Some of them make me weep, as they try to condole and comfort. I'll never get around to answering all of them. but thanks, thanks, especially to those who know me only through this column.

Good friends drop in to make sure I'm not going down the drain. Old friends have written: Gene Macdonald, Per Vidsten, Kay Dills, and many others. You'll probably get my answers before Christmas.

Other friends drag me out to dinner and force me to be genial, if not jovial. It's difficult, but not impossible.

The local golf club says I'll be fined if I don't pay up before a certain date. The insurance company has already nailed me for being late in payment. I missed the date for one Visa pament and been fined. Some guy from Avis in Florida tells me ther was body damage to the car I hired, and was I in an accident. No. I don't think I'll even answer him.

That's some of the good news and some of the bad. To the bad, I'm fairly imperturbable. To the good, I'm grateful.

More good news. My neighbors are as staunch as Scottish clansmen. They don't interfere. They don't pry. But when you need help, they're right there. Jim came over and tried to get my lawnmower going. He did, but it would stop. Finally I realized he'd been trying to fix my old lawnmower, which the dopey kid I'd hired last year had put in the toolshed, instead of leaving it out for the dump, as I'd intended.

As Jim started back to his workshop to have another go, I spotted the brand-new lawnmower at the back of the toolshed. We hauled out a broken bicycle, sundry doors and screens, and pulled out the new one. It started like a jet fighter. He charged me nothing, even though I was the dunce. And his wife invited me to coffee.

More good news. I got a kid to cut my lawn and other dreary duties, and the manor looks half-decent. He was a lad, worked hard, and was honest, if taciturn. "Good"; that's OK.; "Good" was all he said, but he worked.

An old friend died while I was away, and I'm sorry I was not there for her funeral. She had devoted her life to teaching and helping others, and about three generations of students respected and loved her. She was the sort who sent flowers to my kids when they won at a music festival.

Speaking of which, a scholarship in music was established in my wife's name, and she'd have been delighted to know that one of her favorite students had won it. She had not taught him, but spotted him as a winner several years ago.

I'm trying to brace myself for two weeks of my grandboys early in July. It was tough enough when their Gran was here to bawl them our for all sorts of sundry misbehavior. If this column ceases to appear about mid-July, send my mail to the local Medical Health Centre.

They'll be going to a day camp, where they're supposed to tire themselves out with swimming and running and stuff. But they come home at 4.30, want to play soccer or to go to the beach, and are still going at a 500-watt clip. Then they want to stay up until midnight, watching TV. Oh, well, I'll probably survive, and if I don't, so be

My big social event of the next while is the high school commencement, a long, often boring, and usually very hot evening. But I think I'll go. There's something awfully sweet about the girls (who wore jeans all year) in their long dresses, and something pathetic in the graduating boys. strangely pathetic in real suits and choking to death in ties.

Otherwise, my busted shoulder is coming along, and I'm going to try to swing a golf club, do some swimming, and get cracking on a book.
