Brainerd's works revived at gallery

Artist Charlotte Brainerd quit painting in 1971, saying she had said all she had to say, but John Sommer of Georgetown has arranged for her work to be displayed in Halton Hills Cultural Centre, from August 9 to August 28.

"This exhibition, a selection of her best original prints and several of her last paintings, is an attempt to bring her work back to the attention of the public. Since she gave up painting Brainerd has been teaching art in various schools. Her original prints have been exhibited in Canada, United States, Australia, South America and Europe. She held solo exhibitions at the Pollock Gallery, Victoria College, Shaw-rimington Gallery, 1640, Montreal, Wells Gallery, Ottawa and House Sol, Georgetown. Her etchings have been purchased by Galleries all over Canada and United States, including the National Art Gallery in Ottawa.

Household Hints
From Pauline Michalby

It's easy to turn disposable foil baking pans into serviceable reflector shades for basement or garage lighting fixtures. Cut a 7-inch circle in the center, and make a slit from the circle to the rim. Slide one cut edge over the other to make a cone around the fixture, then staple in place.

Emergency ice pack: soak a rag in water, fold it and store in a plastic bag in the freezer.

Making refrigerator cookies? You'll get uniform sizes and less mess if you use a wax cheese cutter.
