

Summer rushed past at a gold medal pace

A plenitude of presents and politicians, topped off by a surfeit of visitors and Olympics, with a heat spell and lingering case of summer 'flu, have made this summer rush past at a gold medal pace.

It all began in June, when the presents started pouring in, as my retirement was officially observed. I was taken to lunch by two of my favorite students, then to a reception for myself and a colleague, Perrie Rintoul, who, at 60, is so fit he could make a 32-year-old Swede appear on the verge of senility.

Each of us received presents from the student council, individual gifts from former students, silver dollar from the town's mayor commemorating the Pope's visit, and a rather snappy plaque signed "Bill Davis," along with a lot of good wishes from parents and friends, and a handsome exorcism from our principal. Very nice, and we departed, laden with gifts for a great steak dinner at Perrie's place.

The following Friday, last day of school, there was a big party-luncheon with a hilarious teaching and office staff present (teachers are even more hysterical than students on the last day, and the bar had been doing a roaring business).

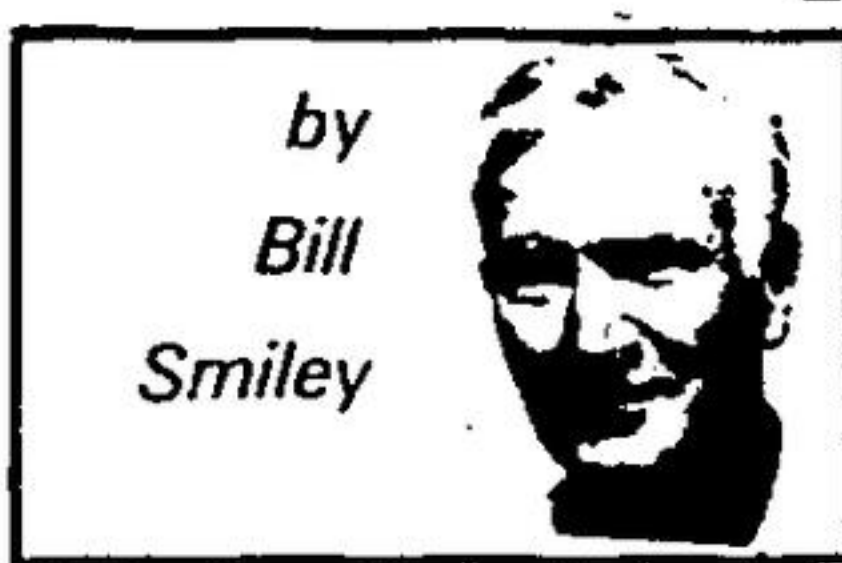

Again the gifts and good wishes poured in. My loot included a golf bag, a very handsome credit at the golf club, a pair of book-ends, and, most thoughtful, a commission for an excellent young photographer to take a picture of my grandboys.

Well, I haven't had a game of golf yet, and the picture is to be taken tomorrow, but it was a fine party, with everyone extremely witty and many warm wishes from long-time colleagues.

As well as gifts, I've been invited to visit the cottages of half a dozen friends, and out for dinner numerous times. It's good to have people who don't forget you're alive, even when they're absorbed in their own affairs and holidays.

I have a feeling Canadians have been stunned by a plethora of politics in the last year or so. First, a Tory leadership campaign, with the rather pathetic figure of a nine-months Prime Minister, Joe Clark, standing in the wings, bravely trying to smile, pushed off centre stage by the smooth-talking, smooth-running Boy from Baie Comeau, who will, one day, get the same knives in the back.

Then we were inundated by U.S. politics, as the Democrats' front-runner, Walter Mondale, was seriously challenged for a while by a maverick senator and a black preacher, and later the rather daring choice of a woman as running-mate. It just might pay off, which is all that counts in politics.

Once more into the ring, dear friends, as the Liberals began the circus of choosing a new leader. The Golden Boy won it, as expected, so we now have a Prime Minister who held no office in parliament, and has shown a tendency to fumble the ball since he walked out of the Liberal citadel some years ago to get rich.

And, of course, the national disgust at the final gesture of Trudeau, who once again thumbed his nose at us, but this time in the grand tradition, herding the pigs, winners and losers alike, to that big fat trough of political patronage. Turner will rule the day he signed the letter agreeing to all those plummy appointments. He didn't have to, though he says he did. As the party's chosen leader, he could have said "Stuff you, Pierre," and emerged with clean hands, and a belief in his integrity. This is just sour grapes, of course. I'm pretty sure because he didn't appoint me to the Senate.

Then, before we could catch our breath, the Golden Boy, badly advised, in my opinion, plunged us into an election campaign. If there is one thing Canadians don't need in summer, it's that. We have two months of the year in which we can truly enjoy the summer, and there is a great apathy among the electorate, despite the attempts of the media serfs to create a little excitement.

There is much more pleasure in going for a swim, much more excitement in watching the Olympics, than in listening to the already thrice-reiterated pablum of the politicians. They all promise the same things, in different terms, which erodes the interest of all but the party hacks and the dedicated fanatics of each party. Right now, I couldn't care if the Rhinoceros Party won the election. They couldn't do worse about inflation, unemployment, housing—you name it.

Enough. It turns the stomach. How about visitors? Well, my son escapes the city at least every second weekend and appears, sometimes with a friend. He professes a simple, abstemious diet, and eats like an undernourished wolf, while trying to force-feed me on things I don't like. He's "keeping an eye on Dad" so that Dad eats enough.

Then came the boys, who would stay here while their mother was on a trip to Israel, for two weeks. We're well into our fourth week now, and Kim has been here for two.

Oh, well. What the hell. They're supposed to be going home this week, and I won't have to play football with a bum foot, or take them out to gourmet dinners of cheeseburgers and chips, and I won't see them again until Christmas, if then.

I'll miss breaking up the odd fight, the sometimes fierce hugs and kisses, the great intellectual conversations about the latest rock group.

And my daughter has written a new composition for piano and strings, has a job, a new apartment, however tiny and whatever the cost (you wouldn't believe it) and got a chance, and found out it's not that easy, to write this column.
