

Cool couldn't keep the crowds away

Round and round we spin, faster and faster we fly. It's a safe bet that had the weather been warmer and drier, attendance at this year's fair might have topped 20,000.

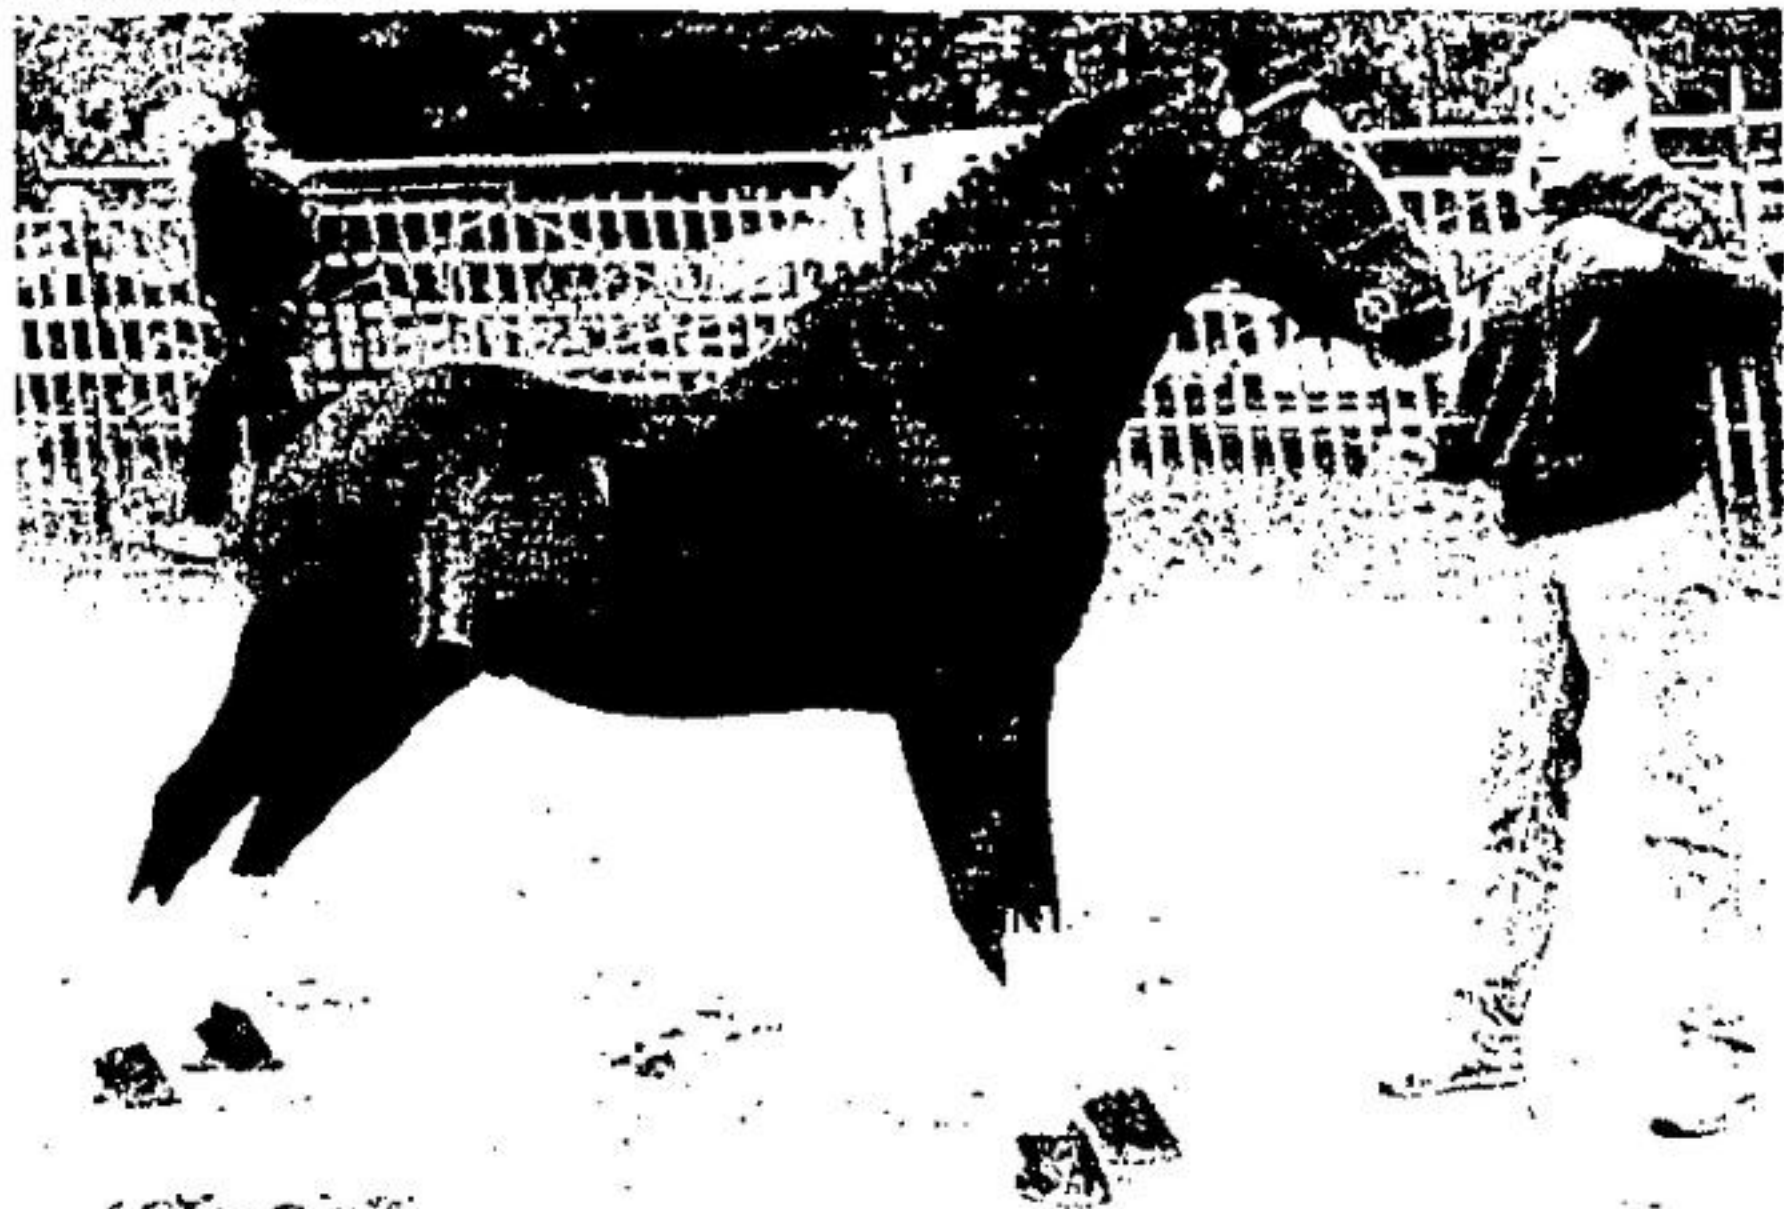

Marching bands of all types took part in the parade through the town into the fairgrounds Saturday at noon.

Photos by Ted Brown, Bill Cook, Pam Douglas, Paul Dorsey and Hartley Coles

One of the "Dream Girls" struts her stuff during the Friday Night Show.

Horses of all shapes and sizes were exhibited Saturday in the Light horse and Draft pony classes.

With the keen eye of a man who knows his business, this judge at the beef cattle show appraised the field. Entries were up in most categories again this year.

Exhibitors acquiring the most points in each division were awarded special prizes. They were (front, left to right) Lorelei Kidd for Girl's School Work, Kara Leatherland in Junior Division, Matthew Marcoux for Boy's School Work, Margot Johnson in the Eggs Division. (back row) June Switzer with the Sears Special Award, Emma Robertson for the Crafts and Hobbies Division, Virginia Hulme in the Canned and Preserved Section, Shannon Johnston for her Junior products work, Bev Brock for Homecrafts, and Harvey Dayhurst in the Domestic Science Division. Absent from the picture was K. Elterby, who won for Plants and Flowers.

The dairy cattle show brought exhibitors from all around.

This Voyager was doing his part for the team as he carried a basketball from one end of the relay course to the other in the all-star competition at the fair Sunday.

There was fun for all on the midway. The planes give this little guy a chance to shoot down all the "enemies" in the park.

Between the livestock and the midway were a vast array of hawkers and salesmen competing for the attention, as well as the dollars, of passers-by cautiously glancing over their wares. This young lady test-drove a riding mower.

Fourteen four-wheel drive trucks took part in the 4x4 pull Sunday afternoon, providing the crowds with lots of excitement.

Mary Rowsell on Brigus jumps one of the fences during the equestrian competition at the fair Sunday.