An epitome of excellence

Despite the lousy weather, this was a great September for Canadian males.

That is, if you happened to be a rockingchair jock, a Monday morning quarterback, or an armchair analyst of sports.

Everything come together, to the dismay of the ladies who happen to like game shows, soap operas, or good, old-fashioned movies that make you laugh and cry to the point where you don't know which you are doing with the tears running down.

It was the epitome of excellence for us old athletes who didn't make the big-time and the big money because we skated on our ankles, couldn't throw a wobbly pass twenty feet, and whiffed at the plate with the count three and two and the winning run on third base.

CFL heading for the Grey Cup. World Series in the offing. Canada Cup in hockey, with many a muttered curse about cheap penalties against the Russians.

And sandwiched in between, some great tennis, golf, Grand Prix races with guys doing cartwheels in their dinky toy cars, American football, which I abhor because of the histrionics of the guys who score a touchdown because of their histrionics.

And then, of course, Pope-watching. After watching the Pope in action, it's going to be difficult to get up for the Queen's visit.

The general result of all these sports activities, for the chap with his gut hanging over his belt, but fire within it, is a plethora of uncut lawns, also unraked, undone chores, unattended business, and unshaved whiskers.

Wives became hewers of hamburg and drawers of beer, in the good, old Canadian tradition. Never mind that your favorite team lost practically everything. You still felt your heart thumping, almost dangerously, when the Canadian team was tied by the Americans, swamped by the Swedes, and ruined by the Russkies. They were still "our boys", and we still believe in miracles, which is not a bad thing for a

In our favor, we ignored the facts that the Blue Jays couldn't have caught the Yankees with a lasso and a couple of highly-bred quarter horses, that our hockey team, with no less than twelve Grey-Cuppers on it, would be lucky to tie Italy, that the local Pee-wee team lost 18-4 in their final game, we were right there with them, cheering every boo-boo, waxing wild with every hit, pass or goal.

One thing you must say about Canadians. We're good losers. We've learned to be.

I remember talking to a charming chap from Montreal about eight years ago, on a trip to Europe. "How come", I asked, "that Montreal has a good football team (Les Allouettes), a good baseball team (Expos) and a great hockey team (Les Canadiens, in their glory days), and Toronto has the worst football team (Argos), worst baseball team (Blue Jays) and almost worst hockey team (Maple Leafs)?"

He assured me that it was only a matter of time. He was right. Thanks to massive injections of Americans, the Blue Jays and Argos are respectable, the Maple Leafs still fourth-rate.

That's enough about sports. I'm sure my lady readers are bored silly. They are much more interested in the real things of life: who had a baby, who died and why and how, when is that grump going to get out of that chair and stop watching that box, what'll I give him (that's portable) for supper?

But then, thank goodness, came along Pope-watching. This is almost as good as watching the Queen, and a lot more important to many people than watching the Queen. Also a lot more important to many people than watching football or whatever.

I could have been in the front row, if I'd wanted to exaggerate my arthritic foot, get some crutches, don some dark glasses and hire a seeing-eye-dog. But I thought that would be a bit much.

I could have gone to the big mass by driving four miles from town and taken a shuttle bus, and arrived the night before if I wanted standing room. I though that, too, would be a bit much. Especially because it promised rain. I can go there any day in the rain.

Heck with it. I'll watch it on TV, provided there isn't an especially exciting game on TV, which there won't be because the Papal Visit seemed to have cornered the market on the tube.

And no wonder. He is a man of terrific presence, with a great sense of the dramatic, as befits a one-time actor, a dedication that allows for no questions, and a feeling for the poor and underprivileged that makes one, for a few moments, at least, feel like a fat, overprivileged slob.

At least the sports and the Pope crowded politics off the front pages. A matter of deep, almost religious thanks.

Only thing I fault the Pooe for is that he didn't offer a special prayer for Team Canada against the atheistic Russians. That would have been a nice gesture, and he'd probably have doubled his Canadian
