Business committee proposal deferred

With the Georgetown Chamber of Commerce "heartily" endorsing the idea, Town council will consider establishing a business development committee in two weeks, once the Region has sorted out its own affairs in that field.

The man behind the idea, Mayor Russ Miller, was not at all happy about the motion for deferral cutting off his chance to elaborate on the idea. By law, a call for deferral pre-empts further discussion on an item. Miller said he was "very disappointed."

"It has been my view for some time that the Town should endeavor to approach the need for business development within the community on a more aggressive basis," Miller said in a report to council Monday night.

He suggested that a business development committee, made up of five plus the mayor and a councillor, interested citizens appointed by council, and using Town funds, try and attract new business to Halton Hills, improve communication among the existing businesses and provide liaison between the Town and the business community.

Miller pointed out that Regional councillors will this week be discussing a new bylaw which could see Burlington assume full control over its business development, relieving the Region of its involvement. "It would appear that in either case, a greater emphasis will be placed on the area municipalities to become involved in business development," Miller reported.

Asked by Councillor Harry Levy about Halton Hills' annual contribution to the Regional business development department, clerk-administrator Ken Richardson explained that the four area municipalities each pay $10,000 a year to cover the cost of "global advertising" aimed at attracting business from around the world.

After one meeting among staff from the four municipalities he said, the Town is not ready to make a commitment to the program for 1985.

Councillor John McDonald told colleagues he received "a couple of calls" from concerned members of a local Chamber of Commerce. He said he managed to satisfy their concerns.

In a letter to Miller, Georgetown Chamber president Dave Kentner said his group "heartily endorses any action to improve communication" between the Town and the chamber.

Council agreed with Councillor Mike Armstrong that the Town's next move on the proposal should wait two weeks, until the issue of Regional involvement in business development has been resolved.

Cruisers 'egged on' in Hallowe'en mischief

Halton Regional Police reported a quiet Hallowe'en in Acton with no more than the expected number of pranks.

Three Acton men were charged with mischief when eggs were thrown at cars including police cruisers on Mill St.

A 23-year old RR 3 Acton man was also charged with breach of probation. The other men charged, ages 26 and 22, reside on Main St.

Eggs were also thrown at a residence on Mason Blvd., breaking a window valued at $40. Tuesday evening a pumpkin was thrown through a window at McKenzie-Smith school, causing $40 damage.

Three small cuts and one foot-long slice were made in the convertible top of a 1970 Plymouth parked in the driveway on Fourth Line, south of Hwy. 7. Damage has been estimated at $700.

A nail was used to scratch a car from its front to its rear parked on Bower Ave. Damage totalled $200.

St. Joseph's balloons northbound

St. Joseph's Separate School students have already retrieved more than a dozen of the 300 balloons they launched as an experiment three weeks ago, including one returned from Wasaga Beach.

Tagged with a note of explanation and a return address, the balloons were sent aloft Oct. 12 outside the school as a Grade 6 environmental studies experiment.

According to co-ordinator Maureen Bujold, several balloons have been returned from the Ospringle area, Acton Meadows Golf Course and RR3 Acton.

"We've had a tremendous response so far and we're looking for further returns," she said.

Trying the experiment for the first time last year, students retrieved about ten per cent of the balloons they launched, one from Nepean, near Ottawa.

This year, student David Gacek's balloon has been to Wasaga Beach and back. Other early returns include Mark Adamiak's balloon, returned from Erin, Christine Mattson's from Grand Valley, Cathy Atoarma's from Orangeville and Carolyn Coslmo's from Melancthon township.

Interestingly, the early returns indicate a northbound trend, compared to last year's results that showed most balloons headed west.

Finding a job
The North Halton Job Hunters Club offers two free seminars Nov. 15 in Trinity United Church hall. Organizer Chris Emberson will help area unemployed residents out with a workshop on "How to find work in north Halton" starting at 10 a.m. and again at 11 a.m.

Together: You & I

The goal for combined efforts between the USC and groups of Bangladeshi farmers is economic independence. Take the Jagarani Club, which to us sounds more like a co-op. Members raise carp in a large pond, in the surrounding area, they plant wheat, potatoes, and other crops.

Kids Learn

Rehabilitation exercises in a centre in Bangladesh supported by USC funds teach handicapped children the skills they need to earn an income. Seventy-five young people disabled by rheumatoid arthritis and other diseases will have the opportunity of learning they too can contribute. Boys are working on pottery, girls are involved in sewing projects, and anyone who can work the garden. They now want a mill for rice husking and the production of wheat and rice flour. USC is granting $28,500 for the mill. USC Canada is at 56 Sparks, Ottawa K1P 5B1.

Kingham one foot bigger

Kingham Rd. is now officially one foot wider. Town council Monday night formally dedicated a one-foot wide strip of property along the street's south side, between Main St. and Campbell Gate, as a public highway.

The dedicating bylaw closes the books on a 12-year old commitment by the former town of Acton to Alteo Construction Ltd., the company that developed Phase 2 of the Kingham Hill Estates on the north side.

One condition of the subdivision agreement was conveyance of the foot-wide strip to the Town, but with the subdivision long since completed, the requirement no longer exists.
