LIONS BEER GARDEN
1PM-6PM SEPT 12-13
GEORGETOWN ARENA

COMPANION TO YOU TOO

Weilding traditional beer steins Lions Ron Lacey and Terry Peer propose a toast to the success of the Georgetown Lions Club's upcoming Bavarian Beer Garden after erecting a promotional sign at the town limits. The Beer Garden, the club's third this year, is being held Saturday in the Memorial Arena. Hans Wagner's Oompah German Band will entertain in the afternoon and evening, with Bob and Corey taking over when they retire.

Parents Of The World, Rejoice!

Going back to school could be a traumatic experience, but it isn't. It's sad to see the summer go, and all those things you were going to do not done. But there's a certain excitement as we step into September, surely the first month of the year in this country.

It is certainly not a sad occasion for mothers of young children. Most of them have a sigh of relief, right down to their sandals, at the thought of school opening. Children are wonderful creatures. But like boozers, they should be taken in small doses.

In summer, they are constantly wanting to eat, do something dangerous, or fight with their brothers and sisters. A young mother's nerves are tough, but can be stretched only so far.

Even more grateful for our educational system are the parents of all those teenagers who didn't have a job this summer. Most of them, even those who complain bitterly about high education taxes, could kiss the minister of education on both cheeks. For, despite all the wonderful things to do in summer, there is nothing more boring than a teenager of either sex, just hanging around home.

I can't blame them much. I get bored silly myself, just hanging around home. And adolescence makes it even more frustrating, because the body is full of beans, not meant for sitting in a lawchair, reading a book.

But the pattern goes something like this. Sleep till noon or later. Get up after the lunch dishes are done and make a shambles of the kitchen preparing a messy hamburger. Leave the mess for Mom. Demand why there isn't a clean shirt. Slouch to the streets or the park, or hitchhike to the beach. Sit around and rap with a gang of other bored teenagers.

If dinner is at six, be sure to get home at either five or seven and demand to be fed immediately. Then spend an hour in the bathroom, fancying up, and drift off to stay out half the night, muttering vaguely that you don't know where you're going or when you'll be home. This, of course, after borrowing in plaintive tones, a little something from the old man.

With exceptions, this is how it goes. It's demoralizing for all parties. And it's one reason even teenagers are glad to get back to school and their parents are not glad, but ecstatic.

Then there's the business of clothes for school. Little kids are sent off clean and shining, in fairly conventional apparel. Big kids battle every inch of the way. Big boys aren't so bad, though even they are showing peacecock tendencies. It's the big girls who cause the trouble.

After a summer in shorts and jeans, sweatshirt and bare feet, they are exceeding loath to don dresses and skirts and shoes. So they do the next best thing — battle their mothers over every item of attire, and demand something exotic: a buckskin jacket, a prayer shawl a micro or maxi skirt, a see-through blouse.

However, once they're back at school the kids enjoy it. For a while. They discuss their summer romances and immediately begin new ones. They brag about the wild times they had. They positively swagger if they have hitchhiked to Vancouver. They swiftly assess new teachers and try to drive them up the wall. They groan with exaggerated dismay when they find out that Old So-and-So will be teaching them again this year.

And how do the teachers feel? Most of them are glad to get back to work. They're broke, or they're sick of muddling around with their families, or they want to see what kind of rotten time-table they have this year, or they just plain love teaching.

I know one who'll be glad to get back for all the reasons mentioned above.
