Gallant Thespians Perform Despite Downpour at Fair

Georgetown Little Theatre members strove to bring a ray of sunshine through the ominous gray clouds that hung over the fall fair on Saturday, but the odds of the elements were stacked against them.

Ron Hunt, Ian Lee, and Derek Joynes and family, Pat Robertson and her daughter Dawn and Linda Nicholls met at Cedarvale at 9 a.m. to load all the paraphernalia destined for the park onto Ron's tent trailer. The sun shone brightly as they assembled their booth and the day looked promising. By 10:30 however, the clouds looming overhead had blotted out the sun and from then on the day was bleak and rainy.

Plans for a professional make-up demonstration by Lynne Cloutier had to be abandoned by lunch-time, but the Palm Reading by G.L.T.'s authorities Pat Joynes and Mary Goebel (which was held inside a tent) amazed many with the accuracy of it all and proved successful. Melanie Barker, a talented young accordionist serenaded passers-by until the downpour

Windows, Doors Shut, Sewage On Farm Fields

Sunday drive in the country should think twice before they complain about the smell of manure spoiling their tour.

"It probably their own sewage they smell," says Mrs. Mary Schertzi of R. R. 1, Norval, who joins them in complaining about the stench but wants the blame laid on the proper feet.

The practice of hauling the treated sewage from the Georgetown treatment plant on Mountainview Road South and spreading it on surrounding farmland is what has Mrs. Schertzi boiling.

CAN'T OPEN WINDOW

"We're going to have to take action soon," she told The Herald. "We can't sit outside and we can't even open a window or a door, the smell is so bad," she said.

She said that so far complaints have had no effect.

"People who allow the sewage spread on their fields are supposed to plow it underneath right away, but they don't and there seems to be nothing we can do about it," Mrs. Schertzi said.

SWEET NECTAR

Mrs. Schertzi said her husband, Joe Schertzi, has never allowed Georgetown to dispose of the sewage on their 800 acre farm and doesn't intend to.

"We've had it for two years and it's unbearable. Farm manure is sweet nectar compared to this stuff," she concluded.

Members, a number of them with coats covering the costumes that were meant to brighten the booth, supervised the kiddies Treasure Chest and handed out brochures as they shivered in their boots. Ron Hill, Vera Macdonald, Lillian Baker, Nora

Donnahee and Marie Eudale dropped in to assist during the course of the day. Georgetown Little Theatre put forward an admirable effort, as did several other community organizations, and it was a shame that the weather prevented them from realizing their full

Casseroles, Salads Best Cookbook Sellers

Despite the unfavourable weather conditions the members of the new Beta Sigma Phi Chapter pressed on undaunted towards their goal, a stand at the Fall Fair where their Cookbook could be displayed and sold.

These busy girls aided by three willing husbands erected a booth with pictures of the many mouth-watering dishes that can be made by the ladies who bought their recipe books. Many books were sold at the Fair and orders were placed for the two best sellers which are Casseroles and salads.

Between now and Christmas

the Sorority members will be selling these books at $3.50 each as a fund raising project. These make the ideal Christmas gift for many people.

The arrangements that had been made for the Hay Ride and the wiener race after the Fair, had, unfortunately, to be abandoned. However not to be beaten, members and their guests participated in an evening of fun, games, charades and dancing at the home of Mrs. Pauline Hughes, 24 Eleanor Cresc. The wiener feast was served by the social chairman, Mrs. Deanna Butwell and the fun continued until the wee small hours.

Beta Sigma Phi member Mrs. Dorothy McCarthy displays the Sorority's cookbook at their Georgetown Fall Fair booth.

GLEN ROARS BACK - Tonight's Winner is Ladies' League Champ

Glen Williams ladies softball team has come from behind to make a brand new series out of the Halton Ladies Softball finals.
