Bill Smiley

Cook? Nurse? Just Call Smiley

Thank goodness for work and routine. They're the best therapy there is in the neurotic world we live in.

The highly touted 'holiday season' should be enough to make a great many people agree with me.

Looking back, I predicted a quiet holiday. And it started out all right. Kim came home from collage a couple of days early, quite happy, just like her old self. But each day her face lengthened as she sorted the Christmas mail. Nothing for her. Day after day.

Her secret desire, of course, was a message from the loved one, who is spending the winter up around Hudson Bay somewhere. Nothing. She alternated between reviling him and glooming about the place.

The day before Christmas, it came — long letter, so personal that she would read only bits to her avidly interested mother. And the thing that really killed her was that in the same mail she received an equally ardent letter from a young man who she's been seeing at university. "Just to pass the time until Joe gets home." She chorled at the irony of it all.

Gentle grandad arrived and we settled in to spend a quiet Christmas Eve. All serene. Then comes a phone call from son Hugh, from some god-forsaken village in deepest Quebec. He and a friend had been in a car accident. The car was a write-off, but they were both alive. (They weren't even supposed to be coming home for Christmas.)

They arrived the next day, all racked up and bruised and abraded and cut. The only thing that hadn't been damaged in the accident, it seemed, was their appetites. They got three about eight pounds of our nine-pound goose.

Then there was a round of X-rays of chests, calls to insurance adjusters, and confessions that some people had six essays overdue, that others had an exam right after the holidays and hadn't done a tap of studying, and that others were out of a job.

This was all very good for my wife's nerves. Combined with the general slobbiness of the young people — they all smoke, makings and there's tobacco all over the floor; they eat and drink coffee in a continuous process for 24 hours and never wash a dish; their clothes are draped all over the house; and the hi-fi goes at a brain-shattering decibel count — all this made her come down with what seemed like stomach 'flu' but to me was a break down.

She threw up regularly. She couldn't eat or sleep. She had no energy. She snarled. She whimpered.

As a result, I was busier than the proverbial one-armed paper-hanger. Talking to Kim about her love life. Assuring Hugh that he wasn't going to die, even though every time he coughed it was like an arrow in the chest. Calling the doctor. Getting Alex in touch with insurance people. Telling my wife to get off her tail and give me a hand.
