

Sees Students Attending School of Their Choice

High School students unhappy with teachers or courses may now be able to switch to schools in other areas, according to Halton County's director of education James Singleton.

"I think within five years this opportunity will be available in Ontario Boards of Education," said Singleton. "With the concurrence of course of teaching staff and the public."

Singleton explained that the community school will decline with respect to the concept of rigid attendance areas.

"Boundaries will remain around Halton elementary and secondary schools. Pupils will start school in their own area," said Singleton.

FREE CHOICE

"But after they've sampled kindergarten to about Grade Two, students will have the free choice to move elsewhere if they apply in time for acceptance."

Singleton's was the keynote speech at Professional Development Day for Halton Secondary School teachers held at Blacklock H. S. in Oakville.

"Pupils who wanted to switch schools would have to apply in time and provide their own transport," continued Singleton.

"Of course there'd have to be restrictions on moving. Students can't be shuffling from school to school."

SCHOOL AUTONOMY

Singleton said that with such freedom of attendance the concept of autonomy for each school and principal would be more effective.

"If 60 kids walked out the staff would get together to find out what happened and why," said Singleton.

INFLATIONARY TERMS

"I don't think kids necessarily go to the teacher who's most popular," said Singleton. "We have found that it's the challenging instructor who attracts student."
