

CHEF JIM'S COOKING WAS (ALMOST) OUT OF THIS WORLD

Jim Gargovich is back on the ground cooking for members and other customers at Georgetown Golf and Country Club these days. Jim is the club's new chef. Before joining GGCC this season he was cooking at the Skylon Restaurant several hundred feet above the ground at Niagara Falls. He was a Niagara area chef for eight years, and prior to that worked a year in Metro after five years in the culinary arts in Florida. He is married with two children and is living at the clubhouse.

Seek Donors with Special Blood Types

Georgetown area people with four blood types are being urged by the Georgetown Branch of the Red Cross to make a special effort to attend the June 7 blood donor clinic in Holy Cross auditorium.

The Red Cross Blood Transfusion Services Committee in Toronto has asked for 37 units of O-Rh Positive, O-Rh Negative, B-Rh Negative, and O-Rh Negative.

They will be used for heart operations on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week at the Toronto General Hospital and the Hospital for Sick Children.

A spokesman for the local blood donor clinic told The Herald there is always a shortage of a group Negative blood and donors with that blood type are also urged to attend the clinics.

Won't Issue Permit for Asphalt Plant

An asphalt plant on Armstrong Ave., on land owned by John Elliott and leased to the asphalt company, caused a stir at Georgetown Council meeting, Monday night.

A motion, moved by Cr. Joan Smith, instructed the building inspector to refuse a building permit for either a portable or permanent asphalt plant.

REFUSE INDUSTRY

They based their move on a section of the zoning by-law which allows council to refuse a permit for any industry they term obnoxious.

Cr. Joan Smith said the portable plant had been installed without a permit. She admitted these plants are controlled by the Department of Air Management, but said portable plants are less efficient in controlling emissions.

The plant owner will appear at committee, Thursday night.

Holstein Breeders Test Their Judging Eye on Nurse Herd

Boston Engineer Spent Boyhood Here

A former Georgetown man, Jim McBean, died recently in Wellesley, Massachusetts. He was 71.

Son of the late Mr. and Mrs. John McBean, he went to the States after graduating as an electrical engineer from Queen's University, Kingston. He was in Chicago for some years, later moving to the Boston area. He leaves his wife.

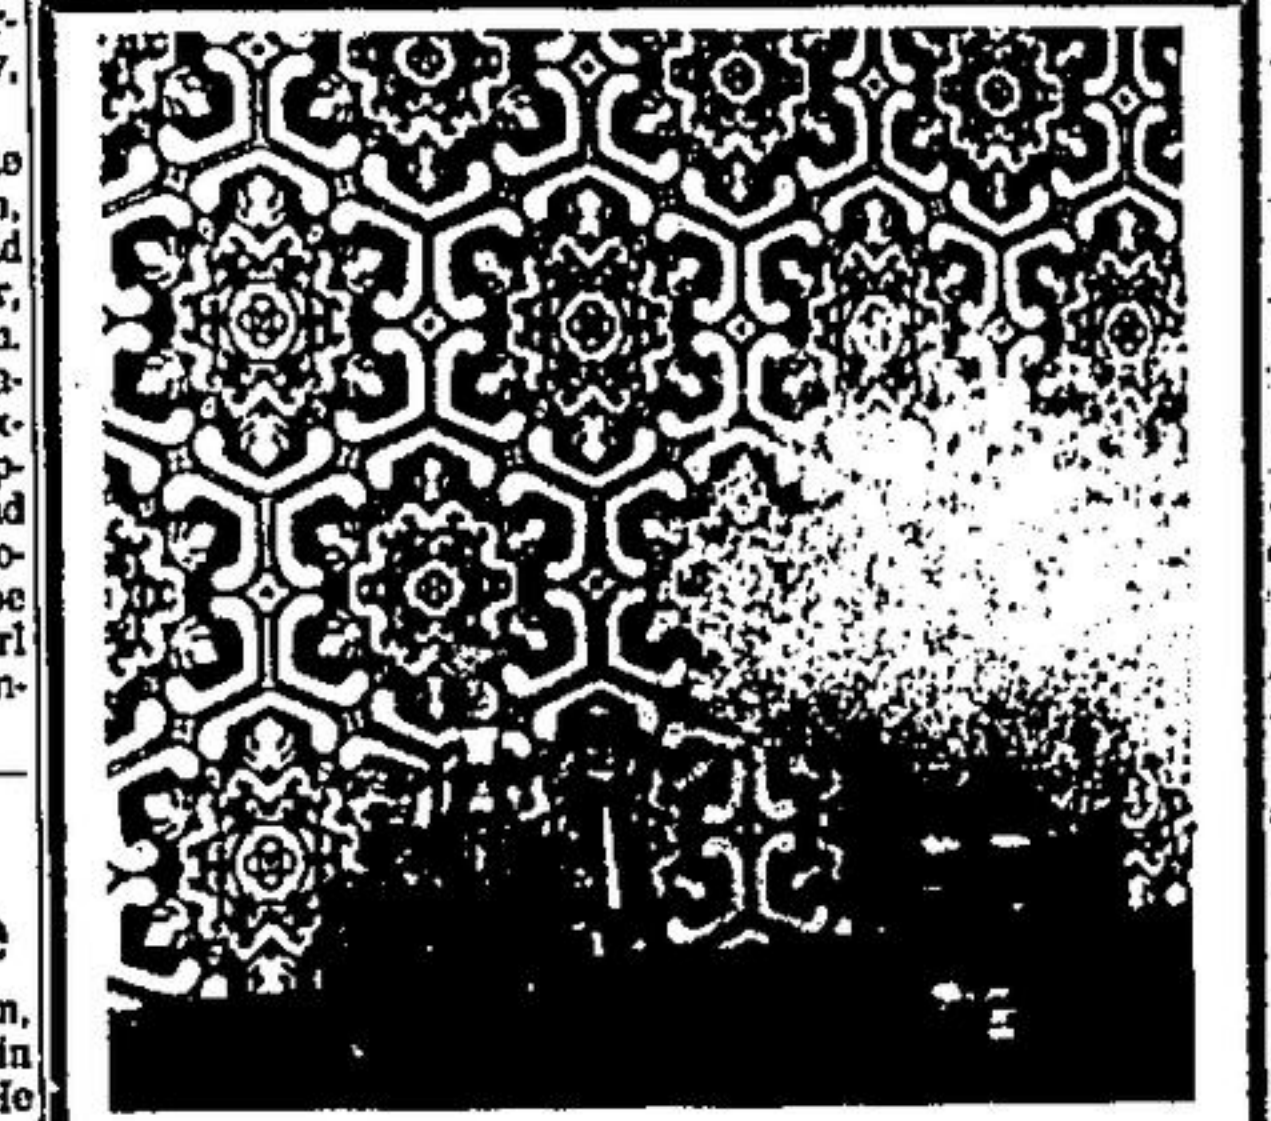

His father was one of Georgetown's long-time merchants who was close to 90 when he retired from his dry goods and clothing store on Main Street. The business continued under the ownership of Gordon Garner. Two years ago the building adjoining the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce was sold to the bank and razed to make way for the new bank building.
