Didn't See Her Majesty

These carnations proudly off the train to the amusement of McDonalds waiting on the platform.

Next day sister Edith was up and ready to go hunting for bargains at the thrift shops and bargain counters, last time we went to Simpsons where she bought a pair of shoes which turned out to be odd sizes. The time before she bought a perfectly good clock at the thrift shop. Yes it ticked away in perfect time, but when they got it home they discovered it had only one hand.

Now, Everybody knows that a clock must have two hands. This time she ran true to form, we went into Woolco's and there was a month end sale. Oh those bargain tables.

At the back of the store we saw needlework patterns & the material priced between 3 and 5 dollars, but here was a nice pattern for only 50 cents. Edith grabbed it with relish. Alas, no more for me. But when we got home, there was nothing inside and only the two outside cardboard. Stung again Edith, she did get a refund. Am wondering if I should tell you of another prank of the Bobsy twins as Tommy calls us.

Just before we left for Vancouver Edith called me to say she had just purchased a lovely pink night gown. I sent her back for one for me. Now we really did look like the Bobsy twins.

Just for fun we donned them and paraded out to the kitchen for Vera to take our pictures. Just modelling them you know.

Oh yes, I must tell you about my hair raising dune buggy ride. Bill's cousin Roy Preston son of Mrs. Hazel Preston is in the dune buggy business together with his brother Ross.

Roy and Doris (his wife) came over to see us and asked if I would like a ride in a dune buggy. Yes said I, and Edith and I had our picture taken in a dune buggy.

Now all you snowmobilers, if you have never had a ride in a dune buggy, you have never lived.

We started off with a roar like that of a racing car, zoomed up the street and made a left turn up the mountain. Zoom uphill next a hairpin turn with Roy giving me the advice to hang on.

This I had been doing ever since we left the road below. Around corners with built up walls, just to keep us from going off the road and landing a few hundred feet below.

Maybe some day someone will come up with an unusual find. My heart, I thought I lost it on that dune buggy ride. So sorry Roy, I might have invested in a dune buggy. They do look so very inviting, for 18 year olds that is. But for 70 year olds well I'll stick to the horse and buggy.

Just before we left Vancouver Tommy said, aunt Klity, next time come by air, you have seen the Rockies once. My answer, "Tommy, people pay fabulous prices for a painting, not to look at it once, but to feast their eyes on it everyday, I shall never be satisfied with just one look at the beauty that lies between here and Vancouver.

The road of life for me is nearly spent. I want to see as much of this God given heritage that is ours today. I see it and love it creator more with every passing day and pray that God will grant me worthy of everlasting life in the paradise that he created for the use of man.

At the station, as we left for home Gwen (Norman's wife) handed me a little package, on the train I opened it and found a lovely little book of poems titled "It will lift up mine eyes."

I read it all through on the ride home and here is a verse I know your readers will love. The Beautiful Promises of God hath not promised skies always blue
Flower-strew pathways all our lives through
God hath not promised sun without rain
Joy without sorrow, peace without pain
God hath not promised we shall not know
Toll and temptation, trouble and woe
He hath not told us we shall not bear
Many a burden, many a care
But God hath promised, strength for the day
Rest for the labourer, light for the way
Grace for the trials, help from above
Unfailing sympathy, undying love.

- Author Unknown
Gwen could not have given me anything I appreciate more.

I am sure these words will comfort many other and inspire them as it did me.
Katherine Cordaro.
