A Bird Watchers' Paradise

North Halton Preserve Stop Off for Migrators

Hints of fall are upon us already - cooler weather, earlier nightfalls, the fall harvests. Among these signs of the passing of summer and the coming of autumn is the annual bird migration, and while overhead flocks are familiar to us all, perhaps it's time for a new view of this exodus.

The Mountsberg Wildlife Preserve, maintained by the Halton Region Conservation Authority as a major wildlife and waterfowl habitat area, provides excellent observation of these flocks as they feed and rest overnight.

EARLY BIRDS
Even though the migration is not fully underway until the middle or end of September, there are already hundreds of ducks and sixty to eighty great Blue Herons resting along the Mountsberg Reservoir shore.

The birds are best observed by following the edge of the reservoir in the evening. Don't forget to bring your binoculars or camera.

An observation tower for ten to fifteen people is being constructed about 500 yards from the game buildings.

GIANTS WEST
The Authority's Program to encourage the nesting of Giant Canada Geese has resulted in a flock of 4 pair of adults and 24 young birds established at the reservoir. Twenty young birds released in 1967 have subsequently mated with wild geese, and flocks of Canada Geese have been reported in the private ponds surrounding Mountsberg. Also of interest in this season are the fall flowers and the autumn forest trails throughout the Preserve.

A number of new varieties of pheasants and other birds have been added to the display at the game farm, along with the goats, sheep and cows already on hand.

The Mountsberg Wildlife Preserve is about 5 miles west of Cambridgeville on the Halton-Wentworth County Line north of 5 Sideroad.

HORNBY

Triple Fatality South of Village

A tragic traffic fatality south of Hornby, on Trafalgar Road and the Derry Road claimed the lives of three occupants in a half-ton pickup truck on Saturday morning, when they were hit by a tractor trailer.

The occupants of the truck were Alice Clinton, 80-years-old, Velma Clinton, 59, and Clifford Preston 63, all of Stauffville. They were removed by the Alexander Ambulance to Oakville. Traffic on the Derry Road was blocked from the 8th Line to the Trafalgar Road.

It is believed that they were on their way to the Steam Era Show in Milton.

The driver of the tractor trailer ended up in the ditch and took off three mail boxes.
