

Largest Graduating Class In School's History

Sixteen Ontario scholars in the graduating class of Georgetown High School reflected well on the school and staff, principal Mike Furlong told those attending Georgetown high school commencement Friday night. Ninety-eight graduating students made this the largest graduating class in the school's history. In addition, five students were accepted at universities on the early admission basis.

In addition to the 98 receiving honour graduation diplomas, (Grade 13), another record was set when 225 were awarded the secondary school diplomas, (Grade 12).

Valedictorian Clive Llewellyn said he felt the school had come a long way since he started his high school days. He said there had been a much more authoritarian type of administration, and very little student responsibility.

He recalled Roger Smith, some four years, as valedictorian asking for more student responsibility. He felt the students had achieved this goal and in doing so had found a rapport with teachers impossible previously. "At least we no longer have police at our dances, or have to go up the stairs and down the 'down stairs'," he commented.

RESPONSIBILITY
He suggested the students have responsibility, but wondered if parents were accepting their responsibility. He cited a case where a parent phoned the principal and asked why he let her son into school dressed the way he left the house. "Don't blame the drug scene on the school," he warned. "The parents have to take some of the responsibility," he concluded.

Principal Mike Furlong posed some questions for the graduates but offered no solutions. He asked if they would agree with Abby Hoffman that the only dirty four letter word was "work" or would they agree with Cassius when he said, "the fault lies, dear Brutus, not in the stars, but in ourselves".

Garner Teaches Power Secret to NHL Wings

A former Georgetown Figure Skating Club professional, Ross Garner, is teaching power skating to the Detroit Red Wings of the National Hockey League.

Power skating teaches the players to get the most out of each stride taken.

Ross Garner who operates the Ross Garner Summer Hockey School, in Oakville, was asked by Detroit to take several of their players in hand during the 1971 training camp.

"I have run a power skating course in Fort Huron (Michigan) for a number of years and they (Red Wings) apparently saw what I was doing. This year before training camp they came to me and asked me to handle some of their players," said Garner.

ADDED DRILLS
"The first day I was given 14 players to work with. Eleven of which, I might add, made the club."

"The next day when I went back they (Red Wings) had incorporated a number of my power skating drills into their
