Production Problems

GLT's Fairy Godmother Is Working Overtime

Cinderella's Fairy Godmother is being called upon to cast a magic spell over Georgetown Little Theatre to help smooth over some of their production problems.

Unfortunately, they will not be able to use Georgetown High School as originally planned. The play will now be presented in Wrigglesworth auditorium.

The special lighting effects planned are now being adapted to the less versatile facilities at Wrigglesworth, extra steps are being built as members of the cast can go down into the audience, and the four dance numbers are being adjusted to suit the smaller stage space.

ELBOWGREASE
However, G.L.T. members are confident that their Fairy Godmother's magic (not to mention a large portion of added elbow grease and ingenuity on behalf of the production crew) will have everything in perfect order by the evening of 17th December, when the curtain goes up for "Cinderella".

One of the special features of the play will be the costumes. Vivianne Macdonald, a new member this season (she played Clara Shepherd in "The Torch Bearers") has put many hours work into the design and manufacture of the 17 outfits. Because some of the skirts are four feet in diameter, some of the cast members are rehearsing in costume so they will be used to managing them, especially during the dance numbers.

(CONFUSED)
As opening night comes closer, the somewhat confused Fairy

Godmother is trying hard to keep her magic spells straight and not get her spell for changing white rats into horses mixed up with her recipe for chocolate cake, but she is still going to need as many children as possible to assist her.

Performances will be Friday night with two shows, Saturday afternoon and one Saturday night.

Halton Holstein Breeders Meet

The Halton Holstein Breeders met at the farm of Gordon McDonald, R.R.3, Georgetown on Wednesday afternoon November 24th. The meeting commenced with a class of four 3 year old heifers to be placed. Mr. McDonald then discussed the breeding and management of his holsteins.

Guest speaker was Dr. Ted Burnside, Department of Animal and Poultry Systems, University of Guelph. Dr. Burnside discussed the main reasons why cows are culled in a herd. The factors over which the farmer has some control are low production, feet and legs, and mammary system, thus in selecting a bull to use on your herd, special emphasis should be placed on these categories. He also encouraged farmers to raise purebred holsteins and to put the cows on test.

Taking one of the cows in the McDonald herd as an example, Dr. Burnside predicted the potential of a calf born to that cow and sired by a number of different bulls available in Ontario. The value of using bulls Plus Proven for both type and production was emphasized.
