

Reaching for Knowledge is Symbolized in Logo

Halton County Board of Education Thursday voted 12-7 on a recorded vote to adopt a symbol as the official board logo for board stationery and agreed to have the communications committee investigate possible designs for crests issued by the board.

The motion was passed without discussion in the open board meeting and apparently was discussed in closed committee. Anyone questioning board officials about what is discussed in the closed sessions would surely be told "property and personnel matters only."

WE VOTED

Trustee Dick Goodin emerged from the closed meeting (held prior to the open board meeting) and approached a trustee who had not been in the session as he arrived at the meeting late. "We voted on the crest. Some wanted to use the county crest but we didn't have enough support," Goodin was overheard to say.

Approached during a break in the meeting, chairman Doug Wood assured a reporter the closed sessions dealt with property and personnel matters. Asked why the crest came up for discussion in the closed session Wood said "that was just fun and games. We were poking fun at the committee."

Asked why the fun wasn't poked in open committee, Wood said sometimes it was a matter of timing and sometimes a few trustees knew a lot about a matter and others didn't know anything.

EVENTUALLY

He said everything eventually reared its head in open board. Concern has been voiced from time to time about too much of the discussion on important items that had nothing to do with property or personnel being dealt with in closed meetings.

Superintendent of Business and Finance Bruce Lindley said it had been the practice of the board to discuss personnel and property matters in closed sessions.

He indicated that in instances where matters other than personnel and property were dealt with, it was usually because confidential information was being given to the board. "I don't know why they dealt with that in closed session though," he said.

The logo was designed by Joyce Thompson, 22, a board employee. She said the emblem took the form of a modernistic "H" and is "symbolic of students reaching upwards for education."
