vegetables and will lead happy, healthy, useful lives, loving and learning, sad and happy. Unemployment will continue to be a fairly desperate situation. And the schools will again be jammed to the rafters with students who shouldn't be there and don't want to be there, but for whom there is nothing else to do.

There will be thousands of broken homes and marriages turned to dust. But there will be thousands of dream-eyed brides and proud young grooms, positive that nothing could ever happen to their love, which is something special.

There will be wars that have no victories, and peace conferences that go on interminably proceeding from nowhere to nowhere. The United Nations will again announce that it is going broke, but nobody will ante up enough to pay the bills.

Thousands of bright young people will emerge from college, spilling over with knowledge, and come face to face with that brutal edict: you can't get a job with no experience, and you can't get experience until you get a job. But thousands of others will break their backs to get into college, where they will learn all about life and find the mate of their choice.

Does this sound sort of familiar to you? It should. Does it all sound rather depressing? It shouldn't. You'll have your ups, too, those glorious and fleeting times when you wouldn't be anyone else or anywhere else.

Your children will change; preferably for the better, but don't count on it. The year will fly by. Make it a good one by thinking positively.
