

John Street Culvert Hazard to Small Types

The Editor,
The Georgetown Herald
Georgetown,
Ontario.

Dear Editor:
We, the kindergarten mothers whose children had to use the John Street culvert to get to Chapel Street School and back, would like to thank Marina Bludd for being concerned enough to become the first crossing guard the John Street culvert has ever had.

We know that a lot of long-time residents in town will wonder, why did they ever need a guard. Georgetown has increased a lot in population which brings more traffic through the culvert. Halton County has lowered the admission age for kindergarten and it is now possible for a 4 1/2 year old child to use the culvert to go to school.

There are also other hazardous areas around the culvert. The main one is the easy access to the creek. There is a big hole on one side of the bridge over the creek, where one young boy fell in last winter. A new hazard is now the long sewer pipe over the creek, which children walk across and could fall off into the water.

I hope by this letter, people realize that we do care in the old part of town, even though our tax money doesn't go towards any substantial improvements in our area.

Yours truly,
Bonnie Covert

First Drama Workshop

Group's 'Tale of a Whale' One Whale of a Tale

The first of three children's drama workshops in town came to a successful conclusion when the members of the group performed an original play for a delighted audience of children and adults at George Kennedy Public School Thursday.

The children had experienced a two-week creative drama programme conducted by four members of Initiative 72 an Opportunities for Youth project. Under the direction of Colin Hayward, Karen Friskney, Anne Pendergast and Marcia Cragg, the children created their own costumes, painted their own scenery and developed their own dialogue.

The group of 30 children ranging in age between five and 11 performed "Tale of a Whale", a play written especially for them by Anne Pendergast of the Initiative 72 staff.

Carol McEachern acted as narrator for the drama which featured Attica Toth as the old man Dorf, Susan and Deborah Scarborough and Sandra Pritchard as his singing whale; and Noelle Jefferson, Susan Pritchard and Roxanne Smith as the three seary water witches.

The second drama workshop for children is already in progress at St. Andrew's Church in the Delrex area. This

Concerned Citizens Talk With Hydro

The Coalition of Concerned Citizens has met with the provincially appointed investigator of the Ontario Hydro corridor proposed from Pickering to Nanticoke, Lee Symes, a spokesman for the Coalition said this week.

The investigator, Dr. Omund Solandt will now meet with officials of Ontario Hydro and later the three parties will hold a general meeting to iron out problems, said Mr. Symes.

THREELINES
The proposed Hydro line will construct three 500 KV lines from the generating station on Lake Erie to the Pickering station on Lake Ontario. This construction would require a 610 foot right-of-way where the towers and lines would be constructed along a 140-mile route.

The Coalition had raised some opposition to the corridor fearing that it would damage the environment and quality of life for the people in the area.

When Dr. Solandt was appointed as investigator of the corridor, the group had lauded the appointment and expressed its willingness to meet with him over the situation.
