Georgetown Transportation Explains Dial-A-Bus Service

A Dial-A-Bus service, at present being considered by Chinguacousy and Bramalea, was explained to Georgetown council Monday night, by John Scott, of Georgetown Transportation Ltd.
Scott described it as a new type of transportation system ideal for smaller areas. He said it was now being tried in Bayridges. He explained the intending passenger telephones to a central dispatching office, where the dispatcher radios the details of origin and destination to a vehicle serving that area. Scott said the town could be divided into two areas, with the Market Centre as a central point. The bus would run between 6:30 a.m. and 9:30 a.m. and from 2 p.m. till 7 p.m., at a suggested fare of 35c per adult, 25c for students and 15c for children. Patronage on Saturdays and holidays would be negligible, according to Scott, so the bus would not run these days.

always intended the committee to look at it, but his was added information not provided by Deleuw Cather in their transit study.
"Deleuw Cather was an independent study, which presented the dark side", remarked Cr. Joan Smith, "but passengers expected, and branded the presentation as a "self-serving marketing report".

The mayor said he now turned the report over to the Transit Study Committee to do with as they wished.
