Dear Editor: I sat in a doctor's office awhile back and watched a senior citizen waiting her

She could just barely sit, but she must wait while the younger people had their turn, because we were on the paper first. She was in this world first, and she was the weariest, but that didn't count, she had to wait for at least an hour.

Couldn't an exception have been made; couldn't we remember our manners, and pass on the consideration she deserved - just to be allowed to go first was all she needed. I also watched an elderly gentleman trying to cross a street.

He was at a crosswalk, but cars didn't stop. No one seemed to care, he was just an elderly citizen; he was in no hurry; he had nowhere special to go, or so the drivers thought. Two minutes longer for an appointment - would it really hurt to have to wait while a loved one crossed?

Last, but not least (far from it; I visited one of the kindest, most gentle senior citizens in a hospital. His treatment, and the feeling I got when I saw him, I just can't describe on paper. I can hardly believe it, let
