Claim $2,000 for Unreasonable Figure Dumping Wash Water

Sam Penrice and Gord Graham, owners of Beaumont Knitting Mills in Glen Williams, asked the Georgetown works committee last week to reconsider their price of approximately $40 a week for dumping the effluent from the finishing process into Georgetown's sewage disposal plant.

Sam Penrice, briefly retraced the history of the mill saying it began in 1878, and was owned by the Beaumont family till he and his partner purchased it 16 years ago. He said they had always been concerned about pollution, but with no sewer system in the Glen at present, or in the foreseeable future, he had to find a solution.

He reminded council, the company also operates a plant on Lamb Street in Georgetown, and stated his company had been an asset to both communities. He claimed the $2,000 a year figure was unreasonable, since he had to add the cost of transportation on it to that.

He pointed out it would then add to the cost of the product. He reminded the committee another company operated the same business and emptied a similar amount of effluent into the system. "Their total bill including water, which we wouldn't use, was $1,000 a year," he added.

Mr. Penrice also asked if the manhole used for disposal could be closer to the Lamb street plant than the original suggestion of the town works yard.

WASHWATER
In reply to a question from Cr. Ern Hyde, Mr. Penrice explained the effluent was the same as domestic wash water. "We use a non-phosphorus detergent to wash the socks".

The owners were asked to meet with the works department and the treasurer to work out a sewer service charge based on 10,000 gallons a week.

Halton Brief

Mayor Les Duly of Acton rose to his feet, and asked for a few minutes, because his brief had been the briefest. He criticized Milton for wanting to break away from North Halton, and set up its own borough.

"It is most unfortunate there is not a united brief here today from North Halton, which would have underlined our esprit-de-corps," he remarked. Mayor Duly concluded by terming the meeting a "tremendous waste of time," and holding up sheets of paper in his hand, called it "paper pollution."

CIVIL SERVANT
One of the few concrete moves to come out of the meeting was the passing of a motion urging the provincial government to appoint a past or present elected municipal representative as chairman for the first term of the regional council. It also suggested the dissolution of all local hydro commissions.

ONE-TIER
In a surprise move Reeve Allan Masson, of Oakville, suggested a one-tier system.

There is concern among county councillors that the province will appoint a civil servant to head the first regional government.

The briefs from the seven municipalities agreed on many things and differed on a few. Most stated there should be only three boroughs, meaning the elimination of the central (Milton) borough.

The three northern areas of Acton, Georgetown and Esquesing agreed Nassagaweya should be partly in Wellington county and partly in the central area, if there is a central area.

STARTLING CHANGES
Two of the more startling changes suggested in the Halton county brief, were the removal of judges of the county or provincial court from police commissions, and the disbanding of the Emergency Measures Organization as a county unit. It could be made a function of the federal government, if considered necessary, said the brief.

The county brief also recommended that the Halton county Museum Board be dissolved, its charter surrendered, and the control be through a committee of the Burlington Mayor George Harrington said the motion was not worth debating and would destroy anything the municipalities had accomplished so far. Councillor Dick Howitt of Esquesing was sitting in for absent deputy-reeve Len Coxe, said there never had been any thought of a single tier system. "If we changed at this point, Queen's Park would wonder what was up."

Mayor Harry Barrett of Oakville suggested a year's delay in the implementation of regional government. He found some support from his deputy-reeve Terry Mannell.
