At Toyota, the future is closer than you think.

What you see in the picture is something everybody wants. It's a new kind of car. A safer one. The car is Toyota's ESV. (Experimental Safety Vehicle). It's still in the experimental stage. But getting closer to production every day.

It uses our specially developed radar system to inflate air bags inside to protect passengers a split second before impact. It has a built-in central warning device to detect problems in the braking, lighting and air bag systems.

And best of all, by the time we're finished, it will be able to withstand a 50-mph barrier collision without structural damage to the passenger compartment.

You can't buy a Toyota ESV just yet. But hopefully, before long, you will be able to.

You see at Toyota, the future is closer than you think.
