THE STAINED glass windows in Georgetown Public Library, drew gasps of surprise and admiration from 86 librarians of the South Central Regional System, who toured libraries throughout the region, last week. The old stone building, the treed setting, and the bell tower, fascinated the visitors.

ONE OF THE busloads of visiting librarians who toured libraries throughout the South Central Regional Library System, looks over Georgetown Library, one day last week, commenting on the selections of books, records and films, available to town residents.

PLANS FOR THE extension of Georgetown library interested a group of visiting librarians last week. They were surprised to hear all the existing stained glass windows would be preserved when the wrap-around extension is completed. In addition, a gallery will overlook the present library.
