Rabies Said On Increase

The worst rabies outbreak in Halton County in seven years is resulting in a lot of wild animal deaths, particularly foxes.

Parents should warn their children to stay away from wild animals and domestic animals that behave strangely. Pets which die for no apparent reason should be reported to the humane society.

Henry Stanley, Halton County's agricultural representative, said two Halton farmers had lost livestock as a result of attacks by rabid animals, recently. One farmer lost beef calves, and another a Jersey cow.

He said the area's fox population is at a peak.
