

Construction Is Go

At GO Site

A BACKHOE bites into soft sand to dig a trench for a storm sewer line on Georgetown station property, CNR yards, for GO Train preparations. Construction is under way to prepare for commuter service between Georgetown and Toronto by rail.

READY-MIXED concrete is poured into the excavation, and into the forms for a manhole, as part of storm sewer construction at the CN station grounds in Georgetown. Ontario government is carrying out changes at the grounds to make Georgetown ready for GO commuter service, now expected to start sometime in the new year.

EMPLOYEES OF En-San of Toronto build forms for concrete manholes, part of the storm sewer system now being constructed at the CN Georgetown station grounds. The storm sewer is buried deep in the sandy soil of the station property. GO Train preparations are responsible for the flurry of activity now abuilding at the station.

CANADIAN NATIONAL Railways station rises from behind a small mountain of sand, material excavated from a storm sewer trench. The excavation work has disrupted the usual parking area, but it is part of the package of preparation for GO Train service. New commuter facilities are being developed here.
