

Halton Aggregates Operation Is Winner

For the second year in a row, the Halton aggregates operation of Indusmin Limited has won an award from the Aggregate Producers Association of Ontario for its work in rehabilitating and restoring the quarry property.

The APAO certificate presented to manager, Garth Lee, particularly notes Halton's outstanding work in the building of landscaped berms which now act as a screen for the Halton quarry and crushing plant.

Now, as part of a continuing site rehabilitation program, banks have been built up with loads of overburden from the quarry operation, covered with top soil, and shaped to blend in with the surroundings.

Seeding of the berms, done as a department of transportation and communications specification, was accomplished with a sprayed mixture of seed, fertilizer and water.

The berm, however, is only one aspect of restoration program under way at the Halton quarry. Well out of sight of passersby, but very apparent to the employees and visitors, are the first definite signs of rehabilitating the worked out portion of the quarry itself.

In the centre of the quarry area, for instance, is a well-stocked trout pond. About 15-feet deep, it is stocked with lively rainbow trout.

Overburden, top soil and coniferous trees have been transplanted to contour one side of the pond, and rock and sand the other. The runoff and stream flow inside the quarry is channeled through the pond.

Using gabion stone at each end of the pond to act as a filter during times of normal runoff, and a spillway during times of high runoff, the trout pond shapes up as the nucleus of the complete rehabilitation of the quarry floor.
