The Adventurer is a contemporary 20" portable model, designed for those who want the full enjoyment of true-to-life color without the bulk of a console. It is conveniently sized and sensibly priced, featuring all the quality and engineering advancements of its proven big brother, the 25" Adventurer. The Adventurer sports a wood-grained durable vinyl that beautifully covers a rugged wood cabinet. The control panel section is smartly laid out with just the right touches of chrome against a rich black background. Dimensions: 24 1/2" wide, 19" high, 20 1/2" deep (including back cover).

RYDERS TV

What Is New In Colour TV

Every once in a long while something radically new and different is developed by the television industry, such as the solid state modular t.v. which we introduced to the Georgetown area back in 1967. Now with a great deal of pride we are introducing in our Magnavox 18" and 20" colour T.V. a remarkably new picture tube, and very different in design. This picture tube does not use the phosphor dots with the black matrix, which has been used almost universally in latter years. It uses instead an arrangement of phosphor stripes, running vertically and separated by a black matrix. It is lighter, and shorter, and it completely eliminates the need for dynamic convergence circuitry in the television set. We are not going to speculate as to why we see a better picture, but it is not because it uses a black matrix. As a matter of fact, it could be that more of the face of the picture tube is covered with phosphor. Since we do see a better picture, we strongly suggest that anyone contemplating the purchase of a 20" or 18" television, should examine a television set using this new type of picture tube, before making a choice. Available in the Magnavox 18" and 20" colour T.V.
