Lawn Maintenance for Fall

Few people give much thought to a fall maintenance program for their lawns other than collecting leaves, yet it's the time of year when a little effort can bring big results and give you the best looking lawn on the street.

So let's take a look at some of the things you could be doing before putting your lawn to bed for the winter.

Though it seems natural to control weed growth during the spring and summer, the weeds are actively growing and producing seeds, some of which will have taken root. So, your lawn will respond to a treatment of Vigoro Weed and Feed in the fall. The blue-grasses you are growing will respond well to the feeding. The weed killer will get rid of unwanted growth, and then the blue-grasses will have a much better chance to grow thicker in the area where you want good growth.

REBUILDING

The fall is the best time to establish, renovate or rebuild a lawn. The cooler nights and moisture in the air are just the right combination for turning a good lawn into a superb one.

When it comes to buying grass seed for a new lawn or for re-seeding, buy the best and make sure it is just what you want for your future "lawn-beautiful". When you sow the new fresh seed, you'll cut it two or three times before you put the lawn mower away for the winter.

Remember too that freshly sown seed needs water to germinate during the first twenty-eight days, so don't let a day go by without watering.

This is also the time to put down some Pink Vigoro winter lawn food for root stimulation through the winter.

There's no point in feeding the lawns with a high nitrogen fertilizer in the fall. You certainly don't want a tall stand of grass to be produced, only to have it bent over by heavy snows and become a breeding spot for various lawn fungi.
