On Your Way Out

David Lees

If the Acton volunteer firefighters feel they suffer from a lack of confidence on the part of the Halton Hills council, they should try sitting behind the press desks for a session in the council chamber. Talk about a lack of confidence...

As likely as not, the erstwhile media in these here hills no sooner get settled at their respective seatings, looked in at least six pockets for their pens, found their cigarettes, borrowed matches, and laid their notepaper out before them, then they get asked to leave.

The press and the council haven't, as they say, exactly hit it off lately. Not only Coun. Ric Morrow came under fire for making statements to the press, but reporters earned some not too friendly sidelong glances as well. Worse, the council doesn't trust the newshounds in their presence.

When the firefighters letter, demanding, firstly, a vote of confidence from the council, and secondly, local coverage in their favor to counterbalance what they considered unfavorable reports, council held it's discussions in camera.

It wasn't as though any member wanted to say something the press shouldn't be allowed to hear. They made that very clear before they evicted three reporters from the room. All they wanted, we supposed, was to say things they didn't want the press to hear.

"There's nothing I want to say that can't be said in front of the press," said Coun. E. T. Hyde, shortly before he voted in favor of removing the press. "Certainly I don't want to say anything behind locked doors," he added just before he agreed that the doors should be locked.

that nature, his were merely more vivid by the contradictions they contained. Coun. Ernest Sykes expressed what was obviously of great air to Los Angeles, visited Las concern to him. The letter to be discussed at the Thursday Vegas for a few days, and spent meeting reached the press, delivered by the firefighters, on some time with Mr. and Mrs. S.

weekly published the letter in full. That was the paper that Mr. is the former Jane Green of Sykes read last week. "This letter has been published," noted Mr. Sykes. "Was this given to the paper, or did we..."

He never finished his sentence, but was obviously concerned that, again, a dire news leak had struck. The irony of the situation was contained by the contents of the Mr. and Mrs. Harris are conletter it deals at length with what the local volunteers considered to be expressions of a lack of confidence on the part of the council. The letter indicated their feels that they would be prepared for a 'phasing out", if necessary in the face of that lack.

"If however, these facts have somehow been misconstructly and all members of council do have confidence in the volunteer service, we would request that the public be made aware of these 'holidays. Their visit marks the feelings. The letter noted.

"We request that a vote of confidence by all members of Betty council be given as much publicity as the adverse comments have been given.

The firefighters were correct. A vote of confidence would have years. been given the same publicity, but that's not what the press witnessed. Instead, after a meeting, held behind locked doors, the press was handed a news release. A favorable news release, just as no doubt all of the statements made in the council chambers were no doubt favorable. But the firefighters will never know for sure, and neither will the public.

The last statement three reporters heard at that meeting was made by a councillor who called out, "will you close the door behind you."

Strike Brought Peace

The rallroad strike last summer may have brought the rest of Canada to the brink of economic disaster, but to Acton it brought days on end of uninterrupted tranquility. What had seemed a necessary and unavoidable evil suddenly ceased. Peace came to

This town is cursed with three, count 'em, railroad crossings within the community limits, all spaced just far enough apart for railroad engineers to lift their hands from the horn, pause and put it back down. The piercing blasts last anywhere upwards of ten seconds. This week, one hotrodder on tracks, leaned on the noise machine from the approaches to one side of the town until he was well clear of us on the other.

The blast endured on and on and on, easily close to a full minute. Aside from being merely irritating, that kind of noise is harmfull by its extremely high decibal level. Besides, it's illegal. The sirens are necessary because the crossings are unguarded.

If Acton, or Halton Hills rather, put out the cash for guard fences that lower automatically the noise could be stopped. It's an undertaking that was being considered in sparsely populated Esquesing, by the township council. The matter was never settled only because the council thought it best to refer the issue to the new Halton Hills council.

If the Issue does come before the new council, hopefully they will remember Acton, and possibly get something done before summer. It isn't so bad right now with storm windows up, but summer nights in the back yard around here are like having picnics on the tracks at Grand Central.
